JOHN P. FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers

MONDAY WAS an exciting day at the polls. With the contest for Moderator of the meeting, together with the rivalry between the different candidates, a large vote was thrown. Men voted for Moderator who had not done so for years, and all the candidates, defeated as well as elected, cannot but feel complimented at the handsome vote which they received. And through all the interest, which was intense, there was no bitter feeling; no wrangling as is oftentimes the case.

It was shown in a decided manner that a citizens'caucus, held in the small quarters of our present town hall, cannot be a fair expression of the wishes of our citizens; many went away not being able even to get a glimpse of the chairman of the meeting. Were a caucus like that held Thursday evening a fair representation of the views of our citizens, the ticket would have been elected. That it was defeated, not in one point, but in every point, at the polls, shows that it is one thing to be nominated, but another and far different to be elected.

The PRESS is perfectly satisfied with the result, and in this we think we echo the sentiments of the large majority of our citizens. Had it been otherwise we should have had no reason to complain; we are not in favor of party nominations for these offices, and in the list of defeated candidates there are good men, perhaps equally good with those who are elected. With many, as with ourselves, it was a matter of preference only.

The contest for Selectmen between the friends of Mr. Relihan and Mr. Kelly was reasonably close. Mr. Relihan, as we have said, has proved an efficient officer of the town. He has been ready at all times to be called upon in its interests, and the experience of the past year has rendered him still better qualified for the duties of the position. For these reasons we could see no valid cause for his displacement; and that too, without the slightest reflection upon the qualifications of Mr. Kelly for the same position. That the latter gentleman has been supported for two years by a following of over four hundred voters proves conclusively that he has qualifications which must finally command the suffrages of the majority of the citizens of our town.

We think the movers in the caucus committed an error in the substitution of any name for that of Rev. Mr. Sperry, on our school board. Mr. Sperry is one of its most efficient members; while he is pastor of the largest protestant church in town, he brings to the school board a valued experience as a successful teacher, which the town is fortunate in securing for the coming three years. Some stress has been made upon the point that business men are needed on this board; that schoolhouses need repairing, and it has been hinted that the board has been direlict in duty. This seems to us far fetched, when already 50 per cent. of the school board are business men, and upon whom directly and personally such reflections must come.

Thomas Carroll, one of the newly elected Trustees of the Institute, has been for many years an active and faithful member of the Lyceum and Library Committee. He is acquainted with the needs of the Institute, and of our people who avail themselves of its privileges. He is also a member of the School Board.

Dr. Pike, elected on the Board of Health, which position he has held for many years, was also elected Trustee. Dr. Pike is one of our local physicians, having a large practice. He has filled acceptably the office of Town Physician and also that of the Board of Health. Dr. Pike has been a resident of our town since May, 1872; having practised previously in Sutton, N. H.

Nathan Bushby, the Trustee elected to serve the unexpired term of the late George Upton, is the present chairman of the Democratic Town Committee. He is one of our sturdy, wide-awake citizens, and thoroughly in sympathy with the best interests of our town. He served a number of years as Engineer of our Fire Department, and always took great pride in the department and in everything pertaining to its prosperity.

The two new members of the Board of Health are Dr. Weston and William S. Osborne. Dr. Charles G. Weston is a young physician who came to this town last August. He is a graduate of Harvard Medical School, and was appointed Town Physician in place of the late Dr. Daniel M. Elliott, which position he now holds.

William S. Osborne is our town undertaker, and will be an efficient man on the Board. Mr. Osborne is known to our citizens from his long service as station agent in the employ of the Eastern Railroad; having held that position for eighteen years; leaving that service in September, 1877. During this time he was Engineer of the Fire Department and Constable of the town. He has been measurer of wood and bark since he first entered the employ of the Eastern Railroad.

Wyman B. Richardson, elected on the Board of Health, is one of our best known business men, being the senior member of Richardson, Doyle & Co. He has been a member of the Board of Selectmen, and will be a judicious and careful adviser in the work of the Board of Health.

The Citizens Caucus last Thursday evening at the Town Hall was the largest ever held in town, probably 600 being present. Mr. Franklin Osborne, Jr., called the meeting to order and in a few words stated the object of the meeting, which was to nominate town officers for the ensuing year. Sidney G. Bancroft was elected Moderator, and Albert Vittum Secretary. Frank E. Farnham moved that the chairman appoint three committees of five each to retire and nominate a list of town officers for the approval of the meeting. R. H. Brown said there had been a conference of the Democratic and Republican Town Committees in the interest of harmony, and he would like to present the result of their deliberations to the meeting. Mr. Farnham objected and thought it was introducing politics into town affairs. Chas. B. Farley knew nothing of the meeting, but would like to hear the lists read. Edgar Upton, B. M. Hills, Geo. Randall, Edward Trask and several others spoke on the subject, and finally Mr. Brown was permitted to read the list as prepared. The question was called for and Mr. Farnham's motion was carried by a vote of 204 to 149.

The chairman then appointed the following committees to retire and nominate a list of town officers, as follows:

For Moderator, Selectmen and Assessors, Overseers of the Poor, and a Board of Health—Winsor M. Ward, M. W. Cummings, John J. McCarthy, Edward Trask, and Richard Kimball. For School Committee, Trustees of Peabody Institute, and Water Board—Frank E. Farnham, Lyman Osborn, Simon P. Buxton, James H. Thomas, Wm. J. McCarthy. For Constables, Commissioners of Sinking Fund, etc.—Stephen Mills, William Dempsey, Wm. R. Armstrong, John Lee, and James F. Sullivan. During the absence of the committee remarks were made by several gentlemen and good-naturedly received. The committee reported the following names which were accepted.

For Moderator—Sidney C. Bancroft.
For Town Clerk—Nathan H. Poor.
For Selectmen and Assessors—Nathan H. Poor, Levi Preston, S. Augustus Southwick, John E. Herrick, Michael Kelly.
For Treasurer—Nathan H. Poor.
For Collector of Taxes—Levi Preston.
For School Committee—Thomas Carroll—3 years, James E. T. Bartlett—3 years, G. Fred Osgood—1 year.
For Overseers of the Poor—George F. Sanger, James P. King, James Fallon.
For Trustees of Peabody Institute—George F. Barnes—6 years, George M. Foster—6 years, John E. Clement—1 year.
For Water Board—Stephen F. Blaney, James E. T. Bartlett, D. S. Littlefield, Winsor M. Ward, George K. Wiggin.
For Board of Health—Charles C. Pike, John Shanahan, Thomas W. Peasley, Ira Foster, Thomas J. Relihan.
For Commissioner Sinking Fund—3 years—Wm. P. Clark.
For Constables—Thomas W. Peasley, George W. Jones, Joseph W. Skinner, Daniel Rahilly, Bowman Viles, Jerry Mack, John Perkins, John J. Sweeney, William R. Fifield, William F. Pingree, Thomas N. Barnaby, Frank O. Parker, Thomas Riley, James H. Thomas, William H. Vittum, Alfred E. Johnson, Orrin R. Evans, Andrew J. Wiggin, John W. Lee, J. B. Bresnahan, Michael W. Cummings.

The following gentlemen were elected a committee to call a citizens' caucus next year—Frank E. Farnham, Edward Trask, John J. Bartlett, Richard Kimball, Wm. J. McCarthy, Stephen F. Blaney, and Geo. K. Wiggin. The meeting then adjourned sine die.

The Pat Rooney combination appear at Mechanic Hall under the management of Mr. N. W. Andrews next Tuesday evening. The Rochester Post says of them. The Pat Rooney troupe gave a most excellent entertainment at the Opera House last evening. The house was crowded to its fullest capacity and all present were delighted with the performance. Pat Rooney is the best Irish comedian now on the stage, and he has, this season, a better company than ever before. The Stirk family of bicycle riders are unquestionably the most accomplished performers in that professsion. Sharply and West, the comedians, are among the best in their line now traveling.

At a recent revival the presiding elder noticed a young man apparently looking for something under the seat, and making considerable disturbance. Stepping up, he touched him on the shoulder and said, blandly: "My young friend, are you looking after Jesus?" "Yes," was the retort, "if he is the chap who has run off with my hat."

PEABODY.

New moon to-morrow!

March came in like a lamb!

The water in Spring pond is on the rise.

Dr. Foster is located in his new office.

Make a note of it, last Sunday was pleasant.

The liabilities of the O'Shea Brothers are about $23,000.

Easter bonnets come early this year and they come high too.

Miss Helen L. Osborn of Kansas City, Mo., is in town.

Where did the shot that our friend Trask fired last Monday, hit?"

John Carroll fell on the ice recently and badly sprained his ankle.

The Firemen's Relief Fair Committee will hold a meeting to-morrow evening.

Mr. Samuel G. Southwick is assisting Mr. Joseph Moore as janitor at Upton's Hall.

Miss Hannah Whitmore, an old lady of eighty years, recently dislocated her hip by a fall.

The very desirable estate of the late Joseph S. Nichols, on Lowell street, is offered for sale.

Rev. Mr. Walker of St. Paul's church, lectured last evening in St. Peter's church Salem.

It is understood that Mr. James H. Thomas is an applicant for the position of Truant officer.

Gen. Sutton has contributed $25 to the Mutual Relief Association of the Lawrence Fire Department.

The house on Foster street occupied by Mr. Patrick Heffernan has been sold to Mr. Thomas McDuffy.

The social dance of Hose 1 was held last Thursday at Temperance Hall and was well patronized. Another will be held on the 15th.

Butterick's Spring Catalogue and Fashion Sheets have been received by Miss S. M. Spiller, corner of St. Peter and Essex Streets.

There are now the names of over 1200 families on the books of the water board, a good proportion of which were added last year.

Mr. Nathaniel Flint died quite suddenly at his residence, in his part of the town, last Saturday. He was 80 years of age on the day of his death.

The large planer for John E. Clement & Co's machine shop arrived last Saturday. It required a team of seven horses to remove it from the cars.

A fire was started under the boilers at the new town house last Thursday and a coal fire was built Friday and steam put around the building.

Mr. M. W. Ray, who formerly drove depot carriage, is now employed as driver of the delivery team of the Forbes Lithograph Company of Boston.

During the snow storm last evening the shifting engine jumped the track near the railroad station on the Wakefield Branch. It caused considerable delay.

Miss M. E. Harris as a Flower Girl, and Miss Flora Howard as an English lady, took part in the fancy dress ball at the Town Hall, Beverly, last Thursday evening.

The Ladies' Benevolent Society will meet with the Unitarian Church, at their chapel on Thursday afternoon and evening, March 15. Supper at 6.30 o'clock.

Mr. Willard Winslow of this town drew a napkin ring and Frank Martin a pair of suspenders at the Grand Army Fair at Georgetown. They were season ticket prizes.

Mr. M. W. Cummings was one of the first constable to be sworn in after the election and the duty of informing the rest of elective officers of their election was intrusted to him.

Mr. S. M. Sayford, the Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., who has been conducting religious meetings at the South church during the week, will preach at the Baptist church next Sunday.

A small flock of four robins was seen in the Wallis street burying ground last Sunday by Mr. Southwick. They were huddled together in the evergreen trees on the church lot.

The Forty Hours' Devotion at St. John'sChurch commenced last Monday. Mass at five and half past eight and confessions in the afternoons and evenings.

"Larry Cuddire" was arrested the other day for assaulting "Monkey" Murphy who went into his place and "set 'um up for the boys" and refused to pay for it. Larry resented the insult.

The camp-fire announced to take place this evening under the auspices of Union Post 50, G. A. R., has been postponed for a few weeks so as to give sufficient time to the committee to make arrangements.

Mr. Chas. H. Goulding has admitted as a partner in his upholstery business, Mr. Frank Trask. Mr. Trask has had charge of this branch of the business for some time, and is a very competent and skillful young man.

We wonder if the Salem Post saw what they wanted us to see Monday? Perhaps it was the worm they queried some time ago we might catch. May be the Post can answer its own question by this time.

General Orders No. 8, from the national headquarters of the Grand Army, contains announcement of the appointment of Maj. E. A. Fiske, of Post 39, as aide on the staff of the commander-in-chief.

Mrs. Merritt Cook was so unfortunate as to fall and break her wrist one day last week. This seems doubly unfortunate as she had but recently recovered from a bad sprain of the ligaments in the ankle.

A butcher team belonging to Mr. Hayward collided with the lamp post at the corner of Chestnut street last Monday noon. The horse had been left standing and was hurrying off on his own account. No damage was done.

Friday night of this week is the second lecture in French's course in Mechanic Hall, Salem. His subject will be "Netherlands to the Alps." These lectures are very interesting—illustrated with dissolving views and ought to attract a large audience.

The most extraordinary attempt at suicide yet recorded, is that noted in the columns of our morning cotemporary, where a man in Boston made an effort to end his life by cutting his throat with a "wife." Whether it is his own, or some other persons' wife, is not stated.

In the legislative vote on the bill in the House to allow women the right of voting for city and town officers, to hold city and town offices, and to vote in town meetings, Wednesday, Mr. Clark voted in the negative. The bill was lost by a vote of 60 to 127 with 20 pairs.

We don't report it as true, but it was told us that the friends of the caucus nominations had engaged a band of music and arranged for a grand jollification on the event of their having elected their ticket last Monday. When shall we hear that bottled up eloquence?

Next Friday occurs the masquerade party by Hose Company No. 4. at Upton's Hall. There will be a large attendance, as a goodly number of tickets have been disposed of. This is the last dance of the season by this company. Music by Tinay & Upton's Band.

March has commenced in earnest this week, and coming a little before its time, monopolized the last three days of February. With cold blustering and searching winds this month is really the severest of the cold season, and all will be glad when Taurus departs and the vernal signs appear.

We are in receipt of a Coffeyville (Kansas) Journal, the residence of Luther Perkins, formerly of this town, from which we take the following item: Messrs. A. L. Ames and L. C. Hanson, of Peabody, Mass., are in the city, looking around. They express themselves as greatly pleased with our country.

C. D. Howard in the Post shows his ignorance of town affairs by telling what the Republican Town Committee did not do for Mr. Geo. M. Foster, as Trustee of Peabody Institute. The nominations were not made by the Republican Town Committee. It would be better if Mr. Howard "didn't talk so much with his mouth any more."

Mr. Benjamin Beckett, Jr. has taken the agency for Peabody and Salem for a very useful and simple contrivance—an adjustable Spring Sash Balance. It is an operation similar to a spring curtain and is adjusted in the same way. They are particularly adapted to old houses where there is no room for cords. Mr. Beckett has a model in operation at his shop on Railroad Avenue which he would be pleased to show the public.

Mr. Sayford, of the Young Men's Christian Association, began last Friday night a series of meetings in the South Congregational Church. A goodly number was present; a chorus choir led the singing, which was congregational, and an interesting and impressive service was held. Mr. Sayford is a pleasing speaker; his words are marked by a deep earnestness which at once attract the listener. These meetings are held every evening in the Church, with a Bible reading in the afternoon at three o'clock. A cordial invitation is extended to the public to be present at any or all of the services.

L. B. S.

There will be a meeting of the Ladies' Benevolent Society at the Unitarian Chapel, Thursday, March 15th, afternoon and evening. Supper at 6.30 o'clock.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

Rev. L. L. Wood, of Helena, Montana, has been elected chaplain of the Territorial Legislature.

Rev. L. L. Wood, judging from papers we have received from his Western home, is meeting with good success, and is popular with the people. Among the notices were the following, which we think his friends here will be pleased to read:

Rev. L. L. Wood, of Helena, lectured at Jefferson City on Friday evening last, on the subject of "Shams." A correspondent says: "Mr. Wood made a very favorable impression on the people here, who regard him as an able and eloquent minister and lecturer."

Rev. L. L. Wood, of the Baptist church, began a series of lectures last Monday evening on Spiritualism. The subject is one of absorbing interest, and Mr. Wood is so thoroughly posted as to be master of his theme. His wonderful memory of facts enables him to dispense entirely with the use of notes, and his command of language is such as to render his speaking easy and effective.

Rev. Mr. Wood, of the Baptist church of this city, has been delivering a series of lectures on Sunday evening for several weeks past on the subject of "Spiritualism." He has shown a very wide range of reading on the subject, tracing the manifestations of a certain subtle power in man that has assumed a variety of manifestations and passed under various names from the earliest dawn of history. Modern spiritualism, so far as it is distinct from the frauds that have been practiced in its name, Mr. Wood thinks, is identical with mesmerism and animal magnetism. We understand that the gentleman contemplates putting in book form the fruits of his study on the subject. It would be a valuable and interesting book, and we hope the purpose may ripen into deed.

The fifth anniversary of the reinstitution of Holten Lodge 104 I. O. O. F. was observed last Thursday evening by a very pleasing entertainment at Upton's Hall. The hall was well filled by an appreciative audience, the programme opening with a piano solo by Mrs. M. H. Mann of Boston, which was rendered in a manner very creditable to the performer. A duet entitled the "Mystical Wave" was finely rendered by Bros. Beard and Nightingale of Bunker Hill Lodge, Charlestown which was deservedly encored and was followed by a comic medley. Bro. Beard then contributed a humorous Dutch song. A novel feature of the entertainment, and which called forth loud and rapturous applause, was the appearance of Mr. F. Clayton in his negro specialties, in which he introduced a large number of musical instruments. Miss Nellie Miles of Lynn in xylophone and crystal chimes solos was very pleasing, and they were rendered with artistic skill. The entertainment closed with the song entitled "Poor Old Uncle Rufe" by Bro. Nightingale. The accompaniments by Mrs. Mann and Miss Myra Larrabee should not be overlooked in this notice as they formed an important part of the programme. The entertainment was followed by dancing and refreshments. The Salem Brass Band Orchestra furnished the music and Geo. H. Davis did the catering. The whole affair was successfully carried out by an efficient committee consisting of Brothers M. F. Crawford, Geo. F. Sanger, Eden I. Kimball, Chas. A. Sanger and Geo. E. Parker.

A copy of the York, Pa., Age has been shown us containing a notice of the Spanish Students at the Opera House in that city. It will be remembered that Miss Alice Newton is a member of that company and the Age says of her: "One of the great treats of the evening's entertainment, was the reading of Miss Alice Chase Newton, or more properly speaking, recitation. She is possessed of a fine voice, is clear and distinct in her pronunciation, dignified in her bearing and graceful in her gestures. In her recitations last night she gave evidence of elocutionary abilities of high order, and is destined to make a star of the brightest kind upon the stage."

As near as can be ascertained the number of cases of measles among the pupils of the Center School has been two hundred and seventy six. On account of sickness in the family there have been about sixty more cases of continued absence from school. In a total membership of 285 grammar pupils there are but 42 unaccounted for by the teachers. It is fair to assume that some of these are kept at home for good and sufficient reasons. The number of truants reported from the primary classes is two.

The fine coal which comes with the common stove coal is as good as any if it is properly used. On cold windy days, when the draft of the stove is too strong, some of the fine coal scattered over the larger coal, when it is well on fire, will check the draft without diminishing the glow and heat of the coal. It is good also if used in that way, to make the fire keep burning slowly all night.

Last Monday the town voted on the question, "Shall License be granted for the sale of intoxicating liquors in this town." There was a singular feature about the voting on this question which we were unable to clearly understand. We went to the polls on election day to deposit our ballot with uncovered head as has been the custom of Jas. H. Thomas and others. Among the assorted lot of ballots that each patriot is permitted to deposit for one thing and another was a ballot in favor of license. We did not see any ballots against license and inquired where they could be obtained. The patriots who were on duty guarding the cradle of Liberty and peddling tickets, said there was no ballot against license; that all we had to do if we were opposed to license was not to vote. It struck us as being a queer way of voting and we thought at the time that the vote in favor of license would be carried. We were satisfied that a great many persons, whose knowledge of the license question was limited, would rather vote for license than not, because they could put in a ballot if they voted for it when they could not put in anything if they voted against it. It is thus that great questions are duly weighed and passed upon.

The fair, supper and entertainment at the chapel of the Unitarian Church, was a success in every respect. Wednesday evening a mute supper was given in which about one hundred participated, and numerous fines paid; nearly all paying five cents. The tables containing fancy articles were well patronized; and there was also a children's table, a candy table, and flower table, the children's table netting $22. Thursday evening an entertainment was given by members of the Unity Club, consisting of a repetition of the farce "Thirty Minutes for Refreshments," which was given at the last regular meeting of that club, and also a pantomime entitled "Blue Beard." They were well presented, and afforded much merriment. The whole thing netted the society over $200, which goes towards a fund for the purchase of the parsonage.

During the afternoon deliberation Monday one unterrified citizen who had evidently "kept his spirits up by pouring spirits down" kept interrupting the moderator with maudlin questions until threatened with removal. During the discussion relative to paying those citizens who fought the fires in the woods last summer, our inebriated fellow citizen created great merriment by staggering to his feet and with comical leer and thick tones inquiring, "Misther Moderator, will yees plase inform us whether it's the prevalent opinion that the fires were the work of a fire bug or of an incendiary?"

The following unclaimed letters remain at the post office; E. B. Bates, Mrs. Abby Buckly, J. L. Barrus, Mary Connolly, A. F. Clark, Sabina Devlin, E. C. Frye, Mrs. Chas. Fitzpatrick, Daniel Hogan, John Kencaly, Mrs. C. A. Kenfield, Nora Kellear, Michael Lynch, Wm. C. Laycock, Philip Lively, Kenneth McAurley (2), N. F. Murphy, Bridget Murray, Denis Melonson, John McGeness, Mary Murphy, Katie McSweervey, J. McIntyre, H. M. Peabody, Wm. B. Prash, George W. Pearsons, Oliver Roberts, S. S. Southwick, O. Sprague, Delia Welch. GEO. RANDALL, P. M.

The following lines are quite appropriate when it is considered that Mr. Relihan is from Mallow:

Hurrah! hurrah! the battle is won,
Men of Mallow, your duty is done.
The mists are cleared and the rising sun
Illumes the Rakes of Mallow.
Hip, hip, hurrah! good men rejoice,
Mallow has heeded the warning voice,
Triumph has smiled at the people's choice
Hurrah! for the Rakes of Mallow.

The offices of Bowditch Lodge No. 619 Knights of Honor were installed on Monday evening by B. D. G. D. Nathaniel M. Jackman, Esq. of Salem, accompanied by his suite. The officers elect have already been published in the PRESS. There was a good attendance and after the interesting work of installation had been excellently performed, the brethren enjoyed a refreshing season of fraternal intercourse.

After the afternoon session of the Center school last Monday the pupils were shown views of the tomb of Geo. Washington, also a cane made from the mahogany casket, together with views of the Potomac river, etc. A large number of views were shown and the children were pleasantly entertained. An admission of five cents was charged.

A public Temperance Meeting, under the auspices of the Episcopal Church Temperance Society, will be held in St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Lowell street, on Thursday evening at 7.30. All are invited. The meeting will be addressed by L. E. Dudley, Esq., Sec. of the Law and Order League of Mass

Posters are out for the Grand Union ball of the "three ones and a two" of the brick engine house at Upton's Hall, Fast eve. The Salem Cadet Orchestra furnishes the music and Harry Blunt of Boston will do the catering.

Miscellaneous.

A VALLEY OF DEATH.

A valley surpassing in reality of horrors the fabled region of the upas tree is reported to have been discovered in the island of Java. This island is volcanic, and in one spot the emanations from the interior of the earth are so deadly that the place is called the Valley of Death. As the traveler approaches it he is attacked by nausea and giddiness. He also notices a suffocating smell. As he advances these symptoms disappear, so that, after passing through the belt of fetid air which guards the valley, the visitor is able to examine with less risk the spectacle before him. A recent traveler describes the valley as being an oval, about one mile in circumference, and from thirty to forty feet below the level of the surrounding land. The floor of the valley is flat, dry, without any vegetation; and scattered all over it are the skeletons of men, tigers, wild boars, birds and stags, lying among large blocks of stone. No steam or smoke is to be seen, nor is any crevice apparent in the earth, which appears to be as hard as a rock. The hills which hem in this valley of desolation are clothed from base to summit with healthy trees and bushes. The traveler from whom we have already quoted descended the side of one hill, with the aid of a bamboo stick, to about eighteen feet from the bottom, and he compelled a dog to go down on the plain. In five seconds the animal fell on its side motionless, although it continued to breathe for eighteen minutes. Another dog died in ten minutes, and a fowl only resisted the deadly air for a minute and a half, and was dead before he reached the bottom. It is believed that the human skeletons are those of malefactors who have sought refuge here, ignorant of the fatal influence of the air they came to breathe. The neighboring mountains are volcanic, but they neither emit sulphurous odors, nor do they present any indications of recent eruption.

THE STORY OF MAZEPPA.

The Byronic story of Mazeppa, which has usually found favor in Western countries, does not altogether correspond with that which prevails in Eastern Europe. The supposed "Cossack" is repudiated by the tribes of which is here supposed to have been a leading ornament, and appears to Russian readers as a native of Poland, who came, at the age of twenty, to the court of King Cassimir. His chief recommendation was a remarkable personal beauty, combined with much learning and eloquence. With the aid of these advantages, he acquired honorable notice, and was made a gentleman of the chamber to the Polish king, who could no doubt have advanced him to further honors had he behaved with due decorum. Unfortunately, the young courtier ran off with the wife of a titled potentate, who caught him and bound him on his own horse in the attitude familiar to English readers and playgoers. But the horse, instead of being an untamed courser of the Ukraine, seems to have been an animal of a very different type, for it is said to have required urging into the thickets, where the unwilling rider was torn and bruised. Mazeppa, thus humiliated, retired voluntarily to the land of the Cossacks, instead of being carried thither nolens volens on the back of the fiery steed. By imposing upon the simplicity of the natives, he was enabled to become their hetman, and many years afterward attempted to stir up a rebellion against the Czar. The Cossacks declined the invitation and exiled their visitor. Yet his schemes must have created some fear among the Muscovites, if it is true that on the first Sunday in Lent his name is annually anathemized in all the Russian cathedrais.

AN INDIAN MARRIAGE.

An Indian youth and maiden belonging to one of the tribes of British Columbia, who had intended to postpone their marriage until the instructions of their missionary should have fitted them to go through the ceremony after the manner of Christians, changed their minds when the Princess Louise arrived in their settlement. It was their ardent desire to be married in the presence of their "great white mother's daughter," and the princess cheerfully acquiesced. The friends of the contracting parties were arranged in two long rows facing each other, the chiefs, the bride and groom and the nearest relatives occupying a cross seat at the head of the two rows. The father of the bride made an address, in the course of which he said that he was giving his daughter to the young man, and that thereafter she would be the same as dead to him. Thereupon a large dish was placed upon the ground, into which the friends of the groom cast money to compensate the old man for his loss. This consolatory offering occupied considerable time, and when the count was made the dish was found to contain four hundred dollars. The ceremony ended with a feast.

Two intrepid Frenchmen, M. Pierre, director of the Cairo Water Company, and M. Ryard, director of the Gas Company, who remained at their posts during the general flight, and supplied the city with water and light when there was no one left to direct the operations necessary to the supply of these indispensable elements, have been created chevaliers of the Legion of Honor.

We sleep, but the loom of life never stops, and the pattern which was weaving when the sun went down is weaving when it comes up to-morrow.

The way out of difficulty is not to worry nor lose faith in God or man. Keep good-natured.

IN WHAT WAY A PREVALENT EVIL MAY BE SHORN OF ITS POWER TO HARM.

Malaria is a broad name for many diseases—all originating in blood poisoning. Bilious fever, the typhus and typhoid fevers and chills and fever are prominent members of the family. Malaria defies alike the builders, the plumbers and the physicians. Despairing of ordinary treatment, the latter almost unanimously recommend BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER as the greatest anti-malarial specific of the age. These plasters act upon the liver, spleen, bowels and kidneys. Worn over the region of the liver, and upon the back over the kidneys, they ward off malaria like an armor. No other plasters do this.

When you purchase, satisfy yourself that the word CAPCINE is cut in the center of the plaster. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York.—Highest awards at International Expositions.

WISE people are always on the lookout for chances to increase their earnings, and in time become wealthy; those who do not improve their opportunities remain in poverty. We offer a great chance to make money. We want many men, women, boys and girls to work for us right in their own localities. Any one can do the work properly from the first start. Miscellaneous.

THE "WILD HUSSAR" OF HUNGARY.

France, Russia, Prussia and other countries, have introduced the Hussars into their armies; but these soldiers are merely Russian, French and Prussian cavalry, dressed in the Hungarian laced jacket. they want the spirit, the horse, and—the "Magyar Isten." For this reason the Hungarian Hussar will not acknowledge them as brethren; and whenever he comes in contact with foreign Hussars, he lets them feel in battle the full force of his contempt. A story is told, that during a campaign against the French in the war with Napoleon, the bivouacs of the Prussian and Hungarian Hussars were near to one another. A Prussian came over to his neighbors in a familiar way with a glass of wine, and drank it to the health of his "brother hussar." But the Hungarian gently pushed the glass back, and stroked his beard, saying, "What brother?—no brother—I hussar—you jack-pudding."

This expression is not to be mistaken for a brag. The Hungarian Hussar is no fanfason like the French chasseur, but he is conscious of his own powers, like a Grenadier of the Old Imperial Guard. The dolmany, the csako, and the csizma, have grown to his body; they form his holiday dress even when off duty—the national costume transferred into the army; and as he is aware that this is not the case in other countries, the foreign Hussar's dress is in his eyes a mere servant's livery; and, logically, the man is not altogether wrong.

The Hussar, like the Magyars in general, is naturally good-tempered. The finest man in the service, he is at the same time the most jovial companion in the tavern, and will not sit by and empty his glass by himself when a Bohemian or German comrade at his side has spent all his money. There is only one biped under the sun who is in his eyes more contemptible and hateful than any animal of marsh or forest. This is the Banderial Hussar—that half-breed between Croat and Magyar, that caricature of the true Hussar, who serves in the cavalry, as the Croat in the infantry, of the Military Frontier. Never was an Hungarian Hussar known to drink with a Banderial Hussar; never will he sit at the same table; if he meets a snake he crushes it under foot—a wolf he will hunt in the mountains—with a buffalo he will fight on the open heath—with a miserable horse-stealer he will wrestle for a halter; but as for the Banderial Hussar, he spits in his face wherever he meets him.

It was at Hatvan, or at Tapjo-Bicske, that Hungarian and Banderial Hussars were for the first time perhaps in the recollection of man opposed to one another in battle. If looks could slay, there would have been no need of a conflict; for the eyes of the Magyars shot death and contempt at their unworthy adversaries. The signal of attack sounded; and at the same instant, as if seized by one common thought, the Hungarian Hussars clattered their heavy sabres back into the scabbard, and with a fearful imprecation, such as no German tongue could echo, charged weaponless and at full speed their mimic caricatures whom fate had thrown in their way. The shock was so irresistible, that the poor Croats could make no use of their sabres against the furious onset of their unarmed foe; they were beaten down from their saddles with the fist, and dragged off their horses by their dolmanys; those who could save themselves fled. The Hussars disdained to pursue them; but they complained to their Colonel at having been opposed to "such a rabble."

THE EMPIRE OF QUEEN VICTORIA.

The Queen of Great Britain is now sovereign over a continent, one hundred peninsulas, five hundred promontories, one thousand lakes, two thousand rivers and ten thousand islands. She waves her hand, and five hundred thousand warriors march to battle to conquer or die. She bends her head, and at the signal one thousand ships of war and one hundred thousand sailors perform her bidding on the ocean. She walks upon the earth, and one hundred and twenty millions of human beings feel the slightest pressure of her foot. Come, all ye conquerors, and kneel before the Queen of Britain, and acknowledge the superior extent of her dependent provinces, her subjugated kingdoms, and her vanquished empires! The Assyrian empire was not so wealthy. The Roman empire was not so populous. The Persian empire was not so extensive. The Arabian empire was not so powerful. The Carthagenian empire was not so much dreaded. The Spanish empire was not so widely diffused.

LIVELY TIMES ON A RAILROAD.

The top of a locomotive smoke-stack blew off the other day on a California railroad, letting out the sparks in such quantities that the whole train was endangered. However, the conductor and brakemen got on the roofs, and undertook to keep them free from fire until they should reach the top of the grade. On looking over his way-bills, however, the conductor discovered to his horror that the car next to the engine was loaded with gunpowder. He therefore unhooked the passenger cars, put on the brakes, sent the locomotive and powder-car up the grade to a side-track, when the engine came back for the rest of the train. Things were getting "red hot," but the conductor contrived to keep cool, and saved his passengers.

Voltaire, who is not always to be trusted, spoke of a physician as "a man who pours drugs of which he knows little into bodies of which he knows less."

He that studieth revenge keepeth his own wounds green.

DURING THE LATE WAR

THE GOVERNMENT MADE ITS BEST ARMS AT SPRINGFIELD, MASS — WHAT MR. DAVID CLARK, INSPECTOR U. S. ARMORY THERE RECOMMENDS.

Your reporter found Inspector Clark at his office on the Armory grounds busily examining "receivers" for the regulation army rifles. However, he was as willing to say a word for the merits of health and strength restoratives as to prove the merits of implements of death. He said: "My business keeps me closely confined to the Armory and indoors. As a result, I've suffered considerably from indigestion and biliousness, but I find that Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is a most excellent medicine for these complaints. I most cordially recommend it, for I am acquainted with its worth. Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is used a great deal by the machinists in the U. S. Armory here."

While FAVORITE REMEDY is a specific in Kidney and Bladder diseases, it is equally valuable in cases of Bilious Disorders and Constipation of the Bowels. Try it. Your druggist has it, and its cost is only one dollar a bottle. The lucky man is he who puts this advice in practice. Don't forget the name and address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. The Doctor would have it understood that, while he is engaged in the introduction of his medicine, FAVORITE REMEDY, he still continues the practice of his profession, but confines himself exclusively to office practice. He treats all diseases and performs all the minor and capital operations of surgery. feb14—1m

New York Mercury for 1883.

Fully equipped with the finest printing machinery of the world, capable of working off 30,000 copies per hour, the NEW YORK MERCURY will enter upon its commencing January 6, 1883, with a determination to more than ever merit the liberal patronage which has marked its career for nearly half a century. Arrangements have been consummated, both at home and in Europe, to secure for the ensuing year many sterling novelties to increase the already incomparable variety of literary attractions which have always made the NEW YORK MERCURY a welcome guest in every home circle.

FORTY-FIFTH VOLUME,

REDUCED RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

But in order to enhance the already widespread circulation of the NEW YORK MERCURY, the proprietor has determined to reduce the annual subscription rate for 1883 from Three Dollars to Two Dollars and Fifty Cents per annum, thus making it the largest, handsomest, cheapest and best family paper in the United States. Each subscriber will get comprising more than 15,000 lines of choice literature in each issue—equaling the contents of a 35 cent magazine!

THE NEW YORK MERCURY

will be mailed, postage free, for six months, for $1.25, or three months for 75 cents. Sample copies sent when requested. Address

KEEP YOUR SCALP CLEAN.

The best thing out for removing Dandruff is HEYLINGBERG'S EUREKA DANDRUFF REMOVER.

It has been thoroughly tested by hundreds of gentlemen, Ladies, and Children, and we have plenty of testimonials of its good results. It is cooling, removes Dandruff, invigorates the roots of the hair, and will quickly produce a strong and beautiful growth in all cases where the roots of the hair are not fully dead, and will stop this unpleasant itching, in fact it is the best hair dressing in use. It is not greasy or sticky, and is warranted free of all oils, and poisins, and will prove the cleanest, safest and most economical Hair Dressing to be found.

Peabody, Mass., Nov. 18, 1881.

Mr. J. J. Heylingberg. Dear Sir:—Both myself and wife have used your Eureka Dandruff Remover for some time, with the most satisfactory results, and recommend it as being indispensable for the toilet. Yours truly, FRANK A. BRAGDON.

Many more testimonials furnished if desired. Persons suffering from diseases of the scalp will be attended at the house when desired.

WINDING UP THE CLOCK,

WHEN THE WEARY WHEELS WERE ALMOST STILL, A LUCKY ACCIDENT REVEALS THE LOST KEY.

"How long did you say you had it?"

"Twenty-five years."

"What! a bad cough, with occasional attacks of hemorrhage, for twenty five years? Why, man, it's a mercy that there's a dozen pounds left of you."

Abraham Orner, of Highspire, Dauphin County, Pa., stuck to his statement, and when the exclamations of wonder ceased, he added:

"Exactly. You're right. It is a mercy.—But the greatest mercy of all is that before I actually coughed myself out of existence I got hold of PARKER'S GINGER TONIC, and a few bottles cured me."

"Cured you? Relieved you, you mean."

"I mean what I say; it cured me," said Mr. Orner, simply. "I feel like another man."

Please take especial notice: PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is not a mere essence of ginger; not a mere stomachic. The ordinary preparations of ginger are beneficial for transient aches, but at that point their value ends.—PARKER'S GINGER TONIC covers a far wider and totally different field. It attacks and dissipates radical and chronic diseases of the Lungs, Kidneys, Liver and Nerves. It is as delicious to the palate as it is prompt and effective in operation. Ginger is only one among many powerful curatives which the TONIC holds in combination. Test its virtue for that cough of yours, or for any of the ills which require an invigorant for the whole system.

And above all, do not permit yourself to be misled. PARKER'S GINGER TONIC stands alone. Nothing else is "just the same," or "just as good." Prices 50c. and $1. Economy in buying the larger size. HISCOX & Co., New York. feb14—1m

Miscellaneous.

NAME OF CHRISTMAS—ORIGIN OF ITS OBSERVANCES.

The name of Christmas came from the Latin Christi massa, or the mass of Christ, and its observance in the church was general before A. D. 500. The festival is of considerable length, extending from December 21—the festival of St. Thomas—to February 2, the Feast of Purification of the Blessed Virgin Mary.

Christmas Day and the twelve immediately following are considered the most sacred.

In the earliest times the birth of the Savior was no doubt celebrated by an annual festival. Many, however, of its observances must be traced to seasons of joy of a much higher antiquity, and those who have paid proper attention to the subject join in the belief that the most ancient ceremonies observed at Christmas were, in fact, but the purified rites of Paganism; for it is well known that the early teachers of the faith, finding it impossible to eradicate the deep-rooted love of the people for many of their ancient ceremonies, endeavored—and often with success—to cleanse them from idolatrous pollution, and so render them subservient to the purposes of the new religion.

Christmas was first set apart as a day of special interest by Pope Telesphorus, who died in the year 138. The Roman Catholics believed Christ was born at midnight, so they had mass or prayers at that time, and again at early dawn, and still later in the morning.

When the common people ceased to understand Latin, carols or songs were used, accompanied by the violin, guitar and dancing, in which the clergy joined, all the people carrying lighted wax tapers in their hands.

The custom of decorating the houses with evergreens came from the ancient Druids, an order of priests who lived in Britain, who, clad in long, white robes, used to cut the sacred, evergreen, mistletoe boughs, laying them reverently upon a white cloth. They believed that thus they captured good spirits who entered the evergreens to avoid being nipped by the frost.

The Christmas-tree, which is of German origin, dates as far back as the seventh century. Its Pagan prototype was the ygdrasil, a great tree whose roots were hidden deep in the ground, but whose top reached to Walhalla, the old German paradise, where its leaves nourished the goat upon whose milk fallen heroes restored themselves.

During the Twelve Nights, a fir-tree, to represent the ygdrasil, was decorated in honor of Berchta, the goddess of spring. When Christianity was introduced in Germany, Christmas usurped the customs of the Twelve Nights, and the tree of Bechta became the Christmas-tree.

Formerly, the distribution of holiday presents occurred on St. Nicholas Eve, the fifth of December, but in order to invest the festival with additional importance in the eyes of the children, it was transferred to Christmas Eve.

In the old city of Ghent, over the porch of one of the churches, is a figure of St. Nicholas, washing three small children in a tub. He was the old patron of children, a real bishop, now called "Santa Claus."

According to the Roman breviary, he provided a marriage portion for three destitute girls who had no dowries, leaving the gifts unannounced at their windows. From this source has grown the popular fiction that he is the purveyor of presents to children on Christmas Eve.

Kriss Kringle, or Kriss Kinkle, is an abbreviation or corruption of Christ Linderlein, or the Infant Christ.—Phila. Sat. Night.

RATS INVADING PARIS.

Paris is just now suffering acutely from an invasion of rats. When the Seine rose during the recent floods it drove le rongeur from the comfortable filth and unholiness of his home in the sewer. The ejected army of rats has billeted itself in more comfortable winter quarters in the Rue Dauphine, in the Rue de Bac, the Rue des Saints-Peres, for instance, taking possession with the greatest coolness, and maintaining strict military order, as if in obedience to a common General. The houses on the river bank they have avoided, keeping well to the boulevards. Unless some propitious deity like the famous "L'Homme aux Rats," in Hoffman's story, disperses them, no one knows when the end will be. Some of the host are said to be enormous in size, as big as cats, says one chronicler, of unparalleled audacity, and with teeth long enough and sharp enough to take a piece clean out of a Deputy's leg with impunity. They turn up in all sorts of odd places—in boots, trousers, petticoats, in boxes, drawers—and one virtuous bonne who resided au sixième nearly died from the shock when she surprised an enterprising rodent in her bed. However, the horribles betes are not to have it all their own way, for an imposing array of all the available dogs and cats is being levied, and the cafes are ringing with the feats of the various champions. "Le terrier" of a St. Denis butcher, "qui ne mesure pas quarante centimetres de haut," has especially distinguished himself; four hundred of the enemy has he slain with his own teeth; he now lies in hospital covered with honorable scars.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Life is said to be like a pack of cards. Childhood's best cards are hearts. Youth is won by diamonds. Middle age is conquered with a club, while old age is raked in by a spade.

The road behind us is paved with experience, while we go forward over the quicksand of disappointment, hidden beneath a thin layer of false hopes.

Many contribute to charity's cause.

For Dyspepsia, Costiveness, Sick Headache, Chronic Diarrhœa, Jaundice, Impurity of the Blood, Fever and Ague, Malaria, and all Diseases caused by Derangement of Liver, Bowels and Kidneys.

SYMPTOMS OF A DISEASED LIVER.

Bad Breath; Pain in the Side, sometimes the pain is felt under the Shoulder-blade, mistaken for Rheumatism; general loss of appetite; Bowels generally costive, sometimes alternating with lax; the head is troubled with pain, is dull and heavy, with considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of leaving undone something which ought to have been done; a slight, dry cough and flushed face is sometimes an attendant, often mistaken for consumption; the patient complains of weariness and debility; nervous, easily startled; feet cold or burning, sometimes a prickly sensation of the skin exists; spirits are low and despondent, and, although satisfied that exercise would be beneficial, yet one can hardly summon up fortitude to try it—in fact, distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred when but few of them existed, yet examination after death has shown the Liver to have been extensively deranged.

It should be used by all persons, old and young, whenever any of the above symptoms appear.

Persons Traveling or Living in Unhealthy Localities, by taking a dose occasionally to keep the Liver in healthy action, will avoid all Malaria, Bilious attacks, Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Depression of Spirits, etc. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage.

If You have eaten anything hard of digestion, or feel heavy after meals, or sleepless at night, take a dose and you will be relieved.

Time and Doctors' Bills will be saved by always keeping the Regulator in the House!

For, whatever the ailment may be, a thoroughly safe purgative, alterative and tonic can never be out of place. The remedy is harmless and does not interfere with business or pleasure.

IT IS PURELY VEGETABLE,

And has all the power and efficacy of Calomel or Quinine, without any of the injurious after effects.

A Governor's Testimony.

Simmons Liver Regulator has been in use in my family for some time, and I am satisfied it is a valuable addition to the medical science.

J. GILL SHORTER, Governor of Ala.

Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, of Ga., says: Have derived some benefit from the use of Simmons Liver Regulator, and wish to give it a further trial.

"The only Thing that never fails to Relieve."—I have used many remedies for Dyspepsia, Liver Affection and Debility, but never have found anything to benefit me to the extent Simmons Liver Regulator has. I sent from Minnesota to Georgia for it, and would send further for such a medicine, and would advise all who are similarly affected to give it a trial as it seems the only thing that never fails to relieve.

P. M. JANNEY, Minneapolis, Minn.

Dr. T. W. Mason says: From actual experience in the use of Simmons Liver Regulator in my practice I have been and am satisfied to use and prescribe it as a purgative medicine.

SHAKER LINIMENT.

CURES

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Inflammations, Lame Back, Enlarged Glands, Toothache, Croup, Sprains, Chronic Diseases of the Joints and Muscles, Bruises, Gout, Quinsy, Sore Throat, Swellings. Frosted Feet, Chilblains, and all Diseases of an Inflammatory Nature.

Recommended by Physicians.

Dr. W. C. Sylvester says: "I have examined the formula of the Shaker Liniment and I use it in my family and recommend it to all sufferers from Neuralgia and Rheumatism. It is better than any other liniment."

A. Hanson, Boston Wire Works, 75 to 81 Cornhill, says: "My wife was cured of Neuralgia.—Four applications cured me of Rheumatism, and Mr. Lord, my neighbor, who has been on crutches fifteen years, obtained relief from less than one bottle of the Shaker Liniment."

Chas. Prescott, Merchant, Randolph, says: "Send me three dozen Shaker Liniment. My customers have confidence in it, and I can consistently recommend it."

Dr. U. K. Mayo, 378 Tremont street, says: "It is the most effective remedy that ever came to my notice, and I cheerfully recommend it."

An Old Nurse says: "If the directions are followed, not one case of croup in a thousand will prove fatal."

J. F. Sawtell, 124 Cambridge street, was cured of Rheumatism, and says: "The Shaker Liniment cured me, and I would advise Rheumatics to use it."

The Boston Traveller says: "Such cures (Mr. Sawtell's) place The Shaker Liniment at the head of all Rheumatic remedies."

Mrs. C. A. Sylvester of the Sawin Academy Sherborn, who was cured of Neuralgia of the heart, says: "Its effects are almost magical. I will cheerfully recommend it to my friends."

E. N. Cummings, the well known Sunday-school worker, formerly of Woburn, now of the firm of Welsh & Cumming, Lynn, says: "The Shaker Liniment cured my wife of an Enlarged Joint, and myself of Acute Inflammation."

C. H. Lewis, Framingham, says: "It gave me quick relief for Rheumatism, and it is the best liniment that I ever used."

Hon. A. Maynard, the extensive manufacturer and founder of the town of Maynard, Mass., who was cured of Neuralgia, says: "By the use of the Shaker Liniment I obtained almost immediate relief and unhesitatingly recommend it to my friends."

L. H. Allen, Station Agent at Rockbottom, says: "I received decided benefit from the Shaker Liniment for Rheumatism, and I have not heard of a case of Neuralgia or Rheumatism that it has not benefitted."

L. J. Jeffs, the well known manufacturer of Hudson and Boston, says: "I have seen such proofs of the efficacy of the Shaker Liniment for Neuralgia that I heartily recommend it."

J. E. Brunton, Manager of the "Golden Rule," says: "The Shaker Liniment gave me immediate relief. It is a wonderful remedy."

COLOGNE

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.

For 1883,

SEVENTY-FIRST YEAR.

The BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER will celebrate the completion of seventy years of useful and honorable life on the 3d of March, 1883. During that period it has secured and held a high rank among the newspapers of Boston and of the country. To maintain all its honorable traditions, and, by the adoption of every improvement which conservative progress can suggest, to make it in all respects a complete newspaper and a vigorous leader of wholesome public opinion, will be the constant aim of the management. With this object in view, it will print of the day, promptly and fully, as its large and increasing facilities will enable it to do. Its REPORTS OF THE MARKETS for Merchandise and Securities, and its SHIPPING NEWS will continue to be full and accurate. The progress of EVENTS IN THE LITERARY WORLD will be carefully watched, and well-considered reviews of all deserving new publications will be presented. The department of DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CRITICISM will continue to be full, judicious and impartial, under the same competent direction which has made the Advertiser authority in such matters. The LOCAL DEPARTMENT will present all the important intelligence of Boston, the State, and New England.

ALL THE NEWS

THE WASHINGTON DESPATCHES

are intended to be a faithful transcript of what occurs at the national capital, undisfigured by personal assaults upon public men and as impartial in the presentation of news as it is possible to make them. The FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC CORRESPONDENCE is the work for the most part of persons who reside in the places from which they write, and is consequently devoted to a record of what occurs, rather than to guide-book descriptions of places visited. In the Daily Advertiser is republican. It does not bind itself to accept all regular nominations, to advocate all party measures, or to yield its judgment at the bidding of any caucus or convention. But it does hold that the best interests of the country will be most truly advanced by the ascendancy of the republican party. Believing that great reforms, in the civil service, in the coinage and currency in the system of taxation, particularly in the tariff, and in other governmental matters, are urgently necessary, and that they can best be carried into effect by the republican party, it will omit no opportunity to press upon its readers the necessity of such reforms. But it will also comment in a free and independent spirit upon all topics of the day, foreign politics and domestic concerns, economical questions, and literary, social and religious movements.

EDITORIAL OPINION

Early in the new year the Daily Advertiser will remove to

ITS NEW BUILDING,

246 and 248 Washington street, where its already excellent facilities for the mechanical work of a newspaper will be much improved. The fastest presses and the use of every modern appliance in journalism will enable the management to compete successfully with any other newspaper in the country in the prompt and attractive presentation of news and opinion.

No. III.

THURSDAY, 18th.—The weather very thick this morning. The breakfast table very thinly attended, and very many getting sea-sick. The hilarity which reigned on the ship when she began her trip has ceased, and the quiet which generally precedes a storm has settled down to almost a monotony. Took an observation at 12 o'clock. Distance ran in the last 24 hours, 215 miles, latitude 30' 10 N., longitude 73' 12 west. 2 o'clock P. M. Continues squally with heavy sea running, and nearly 200 sick. The weather continues cool, we are running a course S. S. west. 7 o'clock, wind grows stronger and bids fair to continue through the night. Steamer rolls heavily. Retired to my berth about 9 o'clock. The heavy roll upset my berth after endeavoring to brace it up from the carling of the deck, but without success, and it landed me on the deck. I again set it on its legs but the sleep which I obtained was not very refreshing. The bad odor from the steerage occasioned by the great number who are sick, is almost too strong to be borne. The wind lulled towards morning.

FRIDAY, 19th.—Nothing worthy of note occurred this morning. Few of the passengers made their appearance on deck and those looked as though they had passed a cold winter. The idea of a fortune which a trip to the mines insured had entirely slipped from their minds and their aspirations in regard to a pile had been forgotten. Took an observation at 12 o'clock. Distance ran in the last 24 hours 214 miles, latitude 26' 19 N., longitude 73' 9 west. Tried the thermometer in a bucket of water and found ourselves in the Gulf stream, which we crossed and entered the N. E. trade winds this afternoon. Blowing fresh with a moderate sea. Set the top and top gallant sail, jib and stay-sail. Passengers getting better of sea-sickness. Set wind sails in cabin and steerage to ventilate. Weather growing warm. Appear to be nearing the West Indian Islands. Flying fish plenty. Many of the passengers sleeping on the upper deck at night.

SATURDAY, 20th.—Clear weather and the sun rose majestically from the ocean. Many of the passengers viewed the sight as the great source of light came above the horizon, but it was with an uninteresting and languid look, which told of the mean feeling to which they had been subjected on the ocean. Took an observation at noon, found ourselves in latitude 22' 14 N., longitude 72' 21 west. Distance ran in 24 hours 243 miles. Course S. S. west. The wind through the Garcia passage S. W. and strong. Made the Island of Mariguana (25 minutes after 12 o'clock) in the West Indies. The sea smooth, and the weather very warm. All hands are getting into the shade. At 4.30 P. M., made the Island of Incaugus. Both of these Islands near the entrance of the windward passage, and are both lines of land extending almost as far as the eye can reach but are said to be lowand marshy in the interior and uninhabited. It rises upon the south side as nearly as I can judge from 50 to 75 feet from the sea. I think I can discover on the east side a small settlement of low huts or buildings and the aspect of these Islands present, a beautiful green appearance.

SUNDAY, April 21st.—Came on deck at 4 o'clock A. M. A beautiful morning. The sun rose directly over the Island of Hayti; as it came in sight it showered its golden light on and everywhere around it. It rose over the center of that point belonging to the Haytien Republic, and it was a most beautiful sight. It seemed as if a star of hope had arisen to enliven, elevate and bless it. This is the third Sabbath which I have passed upon the Ocean The two first amid storm a few years since, but this (thus far) promises to be one of beauty and peace. Had a religious service on the quarter deck. Mr. Templeton of Vermont delivered a discourse from the 1st of Thessalonians, 4th chapter, 13th verse, and the company was pleased to hear it without respect to sect or party. The sea is nearly as smooth this forenoon as we could wish, but bids fair to be a little ruffled by and by as the motion of the steamer indicates a rising swell. We are now running a course of S. S. W. Had an observation and found ourselves in latitude 26' 10 N., longitude 72' 1 west. Ran in 24 hours past, 241 miles. Took in all sails at 15 minutes past 12, noon, and ran along through the wind'ard passage with a moderate head of steam. At 15 minutes past one, made the S. E. point of the Island of St. Domingo, which is under the Spanish Government. It is a rough and uneven country rising in abrupt and heavy ridges as far as I can see, the hills towering one above another until the highest is lost in the clouds which surround them. The whole point as it rises from the sea is covered with a thick growth of wood and underbrush, but cannot see distinctly enough from the deck to decide on the kind or quality of timber growing there. We at first thought it uninhabited on this side, but on a nearer approach we can discover by a good glass numerous little villages dotting the shores in almost every cove, and which are mostly built very neat with high verandas around them, — fanned by the cool and invigorating breezes from the ocean, and on which the dark eyed maidens of Spain congregate to enjoy the pleasures and luxuries of ocean's cooling draughts. The distance from where I stand to the nearest point of these Islands is very deceptive. Any one unused to this place would hardly imagine the distance to be more than 4 or 5 miles from the ship while we are in reality 15 or 20. The bay which makes in between Hayti and this point of St. Domingo must embrace an immense sheet of water, as you lose sight of one for many hours before making the other, with a 10 knot breeze. The occasional view of the different Islands upon this track is interesting to the ocean traveler, especially to those who have never been upon a ship before, or just recovered from a sickness which obtains so little sympathy as that which is caused by a near contact with old ocean. We are now leaving this point and are entering the Caribbean sea, across which we are to make our way for the distance of about 600 miles. Our course will be S. S. east, which will bring us if nothing happens to the place of landing, Chagres. The day has been warm, equal to a day in July in the States. The flying fish are plenty, many of which came on board. There is more breeze as we weather the point, and we shall probably have more sea to-night, or indications are not true, as we shall be obliged to run through the trough of the sea, as the wind lies in a quarter to give us a rolling night. However they say go on; whether we go over or through it, it will be all the same in the end, as it all serves to make up in part the spice of life. The flying fish continue plenty, they are in fact the seaman's friend who make him a friendly call, and then dart away again for their watery home.

How often does the traveler upon ocean or land, suddenly find himself upon or near the spot rendered familiar either by song or story, which calls up to his mind a train of thought or reflection, although it may not be of a nature most pleasing, but as it furnishes a view of former days, and exhibits the tone of character or life peculiar to those days. It has an interest which (even if the story is not of good moral) chains his mind for a moment to it with a furious and strong grasp. The points which we have just passed and the Caribbean Sea on which we have entered has been the theatre of many exploits which were inhuman in their motives and startling and deadening in their effects and results upon the maritime and commercial interest and life of those times. The thousands of pirates and buccaneers which infested these coves and shores and seas, at one time, well nigh destroyed the commerce on this track, and laid the foundation of many a story of bloody contest and skill of maritime prowess. How often have I stood upon the deck and as I have viewed the many places on this coast the recollection of the incidents connected with those days come up and carry with them (if only in imagination) feelings of alarm and dread. It seems to me that no place in the wide world could have been formed by nature more suitable for piratical purposes than these jutting clefts and coves. J. G. PHELPS.

The patrons of the Opera are having a treat these two weeks closing with the Saturday matinee. The spacious Boston Theatre has been filled to repletion, and the performances of the different Operas has been greeted with great enthusiasm. The sale of seats for this week indicate as large houses as any that have preceded. This evening will be signalized by the production here, for the first time in many seasons, of Wagner's grand opera, "The Flying Dutchman." Mme. Albani is to impersonate Senta, and the cast will throughout be a strong one. The stage setting of the work will be very elaborate. The closing announcements of the week are not less interesting. Rossini's grand opera, "Semiramide," will be presented, with Patti as the Queen, and Scalchi in her celebrated role of Arsace, on Thursday. The evening following, "L'Africaine" is to be given by special request; "Martha" with Albani as Henrietta, is announced for Saturday matinee. On March 19, the Boston Theatre company will appear in "£50,000; a story of Pluck," for which production elaborate preparations are making.

Denman Thompson will impersonate shrewd old Joshua Whitcomb at the Park Theatre for this and the coming week. Miss Julia Wilson, so well liked here, will impersonate Tot, while Mr. Ignacio Martinetti is again to be seen in the role of the gamin which he has made so peculiarly his own. With the week of March 19, it is expected that Margaret Mather, who is rapidly recovering, will appear for the week which she was prevented by illness from playing.

Mr. Charles Wyndham closes his engagement at the Globe with the present week. A change in programme is announced. "Fourteen Days" is to give place to "Brighton," an Anglicized version of Bronson Howard's laughable piece, "Saratoga," which enjoyed much favor several seasons ago. The scenes are laid in the Brighton Aquarium, the Grand Hotel, the Bramber Woods of Sussex and in the rooms of Jack Benedict, where an amicable denouement follows a threatened scene of tears and carnage.

Iolanthe still continues at the Bijou, and this week W. H. Seymore takes the place of Harry Dixey as the Lord Chancellor. The large advance sale still continues.

Carrie Swain has concluded her third tour this season of the New England States, which has been very successful. This week she begins a week at Ford's Baltimore Theatre, thence through the West and South.

The long-looked for event, the appearance of Mr. William E. Davis, the popular comedian, supported by his own comedy company, will take place to-morrow evening. Mr. Davis comes under the auspices of Messrs. Moulton & Johnson. The play is a bright, sparkling piece, full of fun, and is sure to draw a crowded house.

It is stated that N. W. Andrews & Co. will bring the Boston Museum Company to Salem. This will be a change, at least.

The Salem Schubert Club is rehearsing "Melusiana."

Whitmore & Clark's Minstrels will appear at Peabody Institute on Saturday evening, March 13, under the management of W. H. Hildreth. The Montpelier Argus and Patriot says: John Adams, the end man opposite Hank White, gave evidence of large ability as a comedian, and added very much to the enjoyment of the evening by his excellence in his parts. If people do not want to laugh, they must not go where John Adams performs.

WEST PEABODY.—The fair and festival held by the ladies of the West Peabody parish was a perfect success, Wednesday evening. Much credit is due to the ladies who had charge of the different departments. In a successful manner each carried out the part assigned them. The first part of the evening the audience were seated while a musical entertainment was given by the West Peabody Chorus Club, which was received by a large and attentive audience. Miss Nellie Taylor played and sang a piece very nicely. Miss Flint and Miss Elliott each played a piece and were received with hearty applause. Miss Nellie Newcomb and Miss Nellie Downing assisted in dramatic readings, each showing strong dramatic power. Miss Newcomb rendered "Aunt Patience's Doughnuts" in fine style and kept the audience in a roar of laughter. Miss Downing read "Robert of Lincoln" in such fine voice and style, that a request was sent to the stage to have it repeated, which was much to the gratification of the audience. Next in order was the mute supper which was very largely patronized. After the tables were filled a poem written for the occasion was read by Miss L. Small, which is given below. Several succeeded in eating this supper without speaking or laughing, the conditions being that all who did not speak or laugh could have their supper for gratis. The sale tables were well patronized as well as ice cream and confectionery. After supper instrumental music; and everything passed off in first rate order, and the ladies' hearts were gladened, as well as the minister to find the receipts sufficient to pay all their debts and some to spare.

Read while the company were gathered at the table.

My friends you know the rules to-night
Enjoin a stillness stern;
You must not speak, laugh, even smile,
Would you your supper earn.

But every one must stolid keep,
Close on the prescribed line,
For at the least break in the ranks,
Stands grim the ready fine.

Temptations strong will rude beset,
But these you need not fear;
If you but keep a wary eye,
And turn a cold deaf ear.

To me, Ha! Ha! the bare idea
Seems so exceeding funny;
I laugh e'en at the starting point,
And cheerful lose my money.

If two or three will join with me,
We'll do our very best,
To raise a vortex wild of mirth,
And draw in all the rest.

Think what a horrid life were ours,
If it were not for fun;
Insane asylums, many now
Would all be merged in one.

The sober would more sober grow.
The merry, grave to sadness,
And naught could be the last extreme,
But melancholy madness.

Throughout the length and breadth of earth
The strongest human will,
Would be a wreck as pitiful,
As any on yon hill.

No sadder state could be conceived,
Indeed, I think 'twere better,
If Byron's "Dream of Darkness," were
Fulfilled unto the letter.

Another reason still awaits,
Why all should merry be,
It has been said who plays the "mute"
Shall have his supper free.

But as we stand in need of funds,
The gospel to sustain;
We hope, from this our bounteous cheer,
To realize some gain.

It may be small, but e'en as drops
Make up the mighty sea.
So little coins will help to fill
Our pastor's treasury.

For he though versed in wisdom's lore,
In many books well read,
Can ne'er supply our spirit's needs,
Unless supplied with bread.

Then waver in the ranks, my friends,
Let every face be sunny,
For hearty laughs are good for health,
And oh, we want your money.

M. U. N.

Last Friday evening the West Peabody Farmers' Club was addressed by Dea. David Stiles, of Middleton. Subject, "The Horse." Before the lecture the Chorus Club rendered several selections of music, to which Mr. Stiles replied, "that he should much rather listen to mere music than to make music by his talk." He commenced by saying that a horse was no horse at all without good feet; he dwelt much of the evening on the mode of shoeing and style of shoe used. He thought many horses were spoiled by bad shoeing; he believed in light shoes made of narrow iron, so as not to cover much of the foot, and did not believe in shoeing colts too young. He stated he had worked at the anvil for fifty-four years, and the shoeing of the horse had been his constant study to keep their feet in good order and have them travel with ease. He spoke of the different diseases of the foot and their remedies; he did not believe in narrow stalls, he wanted them wide enough so a horse could lay down and stretch his length. He could also shoe a stumbling horse so he would not fall. That statement brought J. P. King to the floor; his brother had a horse that most every time they drove him, he would tumble heels over head and head over heels. Mr. Stiles took this horse in charge and shod him for six years and he was never known to tumble after he shod him. Mr. Stiles told the audience to ask him any questions they wished, when numerous were asked by Messrs. Needham, Ingraham, Roberts, King, Viles, Spalding, Walcott, Durkee, Small and many others, to which the Deacon responded freely. Mr. Ingraham made a motion that the club return a vote of thanks to Mr. Stiles for the very able and instructive essay he had given them; which was heartily responded to. Meeting was kept up to a late hour and closed with a song by the Chorus Club. Next Friday evening question, "Manures," opened by John G. Walcott.

A new party has got hold of the Paper Mill, and it looks as though they meant business by the help they are putting on, and tenements are so scarce that they are soon to build houses for them.

Last Tuesday evening, at Lynnfield, quite a nice entertainment was given by the Band of Mercy, for the Chapel fund, which was largely attended. It consisted of music, instrumental and vocal, dialogues, tableaux, refreshments, etc. One of the most interesting features was voting off an album, Elsie Wilkins receiving 96 votes, being the highest number. Every one seemed to have a good time and quite a sum was added to the Chapel fund. V.

SO. PEABODY.—The many friends of Mr. Dexter Smith and sister sympathize very closely with them in the great loss they, with their father and brothers, have met in the death of their mother last week, at their residence on Marlboro' street, in this city. Mrs. Smith was of a peculiarly loving and helpful nature, who found her greatest happiness in ministering to her family, and this quality was ardently returned by all connected with her by family or other ties. She took a deep interest in all the ventures of her talented children.—Boston Commonwealth.

Mrs. Smith formerly resided in South Peabody for many years. She was the wife of Mr. William D. Smith, once proprietor of the Naumkeag House, and who is now engaged in business in Boston. It was while Mr. and Mrs. Smith resided in South Peabody that Dexter Smith was born.

Rev. J. W. Colwell gave a very interesting sermon last Sunday afternoon on Temperance, and in the evening Mrs. M. O. Stevens occupied the rostrum and her lecture was listened to by a large audience.

The contract for teaming the rails for the Peabody, Lynn and Boston Horse R. R., has been awarded to Chas. Wilson of Wyoma. He has dropped the rails on the sides of the road as far as the Catholic cemetery, (formerly the trotting park). It is Mr. Breed's intention to break ground as soon as the frost is out.

About thirty couples attended the dance of Hose 5, last Friday night, and a very enjoyable time was had by all present.

The spire on the church has received its second coat of paint, and the carpenters will take the staging down as soon as the weather will permit. The vestry is nearly done. The society are in hopes to get into it by the 18th of this month.

It is high time that some one did something to quiet the disturbance made by the boys at the Sunday evening prayer meeting at the church. A warning, boys, so be careful.

PENALTY FOR SIN.—Mar. 2, Chas. Drake, drunkenness, $5.85. Salem jail.

3, Lawrence Cuddire, assault, $5 and costs. Appealed.

5, Robert Boyle, drunkenness, two months in Salem jail.

5, Thomas J. Murphy, drunkenness, $5.85. Salem jail.

6, Alfred Rodgers, drunkenness, $10.-55.

NOTICE.

As there seems to be an anxiety on the part of certain people in this vicinity, whether Mr. Geo. H. Davis has been, is, or is to be a partner of mine, I would respectfully inform them that he has never been, is not and probably never will be. Mr. Davis' services ceased with me Jan. 31, 1883.

Dramatic and Musical.

Another season of minstrelsy holds the boards at the Boston Theatre this week, in the shape of Barlow, Wilson & Co's. splendid troupe. It includes Milt Barlow, in his "old darky" specialties; George W. Wilson, in eccentric scenes; Luke Schoolcraft and George H. Coes, long-established favorites. who will be seen in their new "Sequel to Mrs. Diddimus' Party," and others, and includes a grand clog tournament. Next week the powerful drama by Henry Pettitt and Augustus Harris, entitled "£50,000; A Story of Pluck," is to be brought out. It is the same drama which had such success at Drury Lane Theatre, London. Manager Tompkins holds the sole right to its presentation in America, and designs to have his offering of the drama excel the famous London production.

This is the second and closing week of Denman Thompson at the Park, and those who would see the old farmer must improve their opportunity. Next week it is positively announced that Margaret Mather will appear, and she will be warmly greeted. She will play Pauline in the Lady of Lyons, Monday and Thursday nights and Saturday matinee, and she will be seen in other plays during the week.

Everybody who saw "Green Room Fun" even in its first estate, as given by the favorite Salsbury Troubadours last season, was delighted, and now that the piece, reconstructed and improved by its author, Bronson Howard, is again to be seen on the Globe stage, very large audiences should assemble. It will be played this week only, to be followed by the Boston Ideal Opera Company in a round of their famous successes.

The popularity of the Bijou and the opera that holds sway there continues to be made evident by a remarkably large advance sale of seats. When it will give way to other attractions is beyond comprehension. Its run is very remarkable. It is announced that a fine company is being secured for next season at the Bijou, which will include Rose Stella, and a permanent lyric organization. It is proposed to give at least one month, early in the season, to a series of opera bouffe performances that shall surpass in perfection of detail anything seen here.

The Spanish Students, with Alice Chase Newton, are meeting with great success in the Middle and Western States. They are booked in Pennsylvania and New York until April 16, and will then appear in Philadelphia for a week's engagement.

D. S. Thomas of New Haven has decided to accept Barnum, Bailey & Hutchinsou's advance agency the coming season, the firm having repeatedly urged him since last fall, when he severed his connection with it.

Buffalo Bill comes to Salem to-morrow evening, and he is sure of a cordial reception. He will bring out his new play, "Twenty Days," written expressly for him by Charles Foster. It is a representation of wild life on the frontier, filled with plots and counter plots, reckless and daring attempts at villainy, met by bold and successful opposition. From first to last the play is full of thrilling incidents and the excitement of the play is kept up throughout. Mr. Cody himself is an actor of rare ability, and he is well supported, the members of the company being all good in their several parts.

We are under obligations to Frank Carlos Griffith, business manager of the Boston Theatre company on their New England circuit, for an elegant lithograph of William Redmund, the popular and talented leading man at the Boston Theatre. It is the work of Forbes & Co., of Boston, and reflects great credit on the artist.

Owing probably to the severe weather and bad walking the minstrels were not greeted by a large audience in the Institute Saturday evening. Whitmore & Clark, however, have an established reputation and a small audience occasionally does not lessen their ardor. They gave the programme and received hearty applause and we doubt not under more favorable circumstances would have been greeted as they usually are by a good house. They came under the management of Wm. H. Hildreth.

Rice's Opera Co. performed "Iolanthe" at Mechanic Hall, Monday evening to a good audience. The performance on the whole was better than that of the previous company. The duets and solos especially, were rendered with taste, and showed careful preparation.

Wednesday evening, March 21st, the Madison Square Theatre Company will appear in Mechanic Hall, in Esmeralda. The company includes R. F. McClannin, so long an old time favorite at the Boston Museum, as Farmer Rogers, Mrs. Leslie Allen, Estelle Clayton, Rillie Deaves, E. F. Eberle and others. This is not a third or fourth combination of the Madison Square Theatre, but is composed of ladies and gentlemen who are of the first rank in the profession. There ought to be a crowded house. The company and the play both deserve it. Sale of seats opens at Ropes' Saturday.

With the week beginning April 2d, the trained horses, which have created such a furore in Boston, will give a week's performance in Salem, under the management of Moulton & Johnson.

Margaret Mather will play Romeo and Juliet at Mechanic Hall, Thursday, April 19, under the management of Moulton & Johnson.

The attention of our readers is directed to the announcement of F. A. BRAGDON, our popular baker. Mr. Bragdon's cream bread and rolls are begining to be an indispensable luxury in our households. Those who have tried them once buy again and again, and it will be seen that he has specified a list of the articles which he keeps for sale. Three teams are kept constantly on the road, and his patrons who do not wish to go as far as the bakery, can purchase any of them at his store on the square. Mr. Bragdon has largely increased the trade of the bakery since coming to the town. He gives his personal attention to the details of the business, which is seen perceptibly in the quality of the goods baked. Every Sunday morning the teams are in all parts of the town with beans and brown-bread, and we have had occasion of late to notice the superior excellence of his brown-bread. The drivers of the teams are furnished with cards for the windows, and prompt attention is paid to calls, by his obliging drivers.

Sunday services at the South Church were of great interest. The nine o'clock prayer meeting was fully attended and impressive. At the morning service Rev. S. W. Sayford preached an earnest sermon from Matt. XXII: 42. "What think ye of Christ? whose son is He?" His powerful persuasive words made a deep impression upon many minds. About two hundred and fifty were gathered in the vestry at half past three at the men's meeting. Rev. H. M. Moore addressed the meeting upon the worth of the religion of Christ to business men, Mr. Sayford following in a brief statement of the worth of the religion of Christ in individual character. He spoke of his own experience of unreligious and religious life. A very large audience gathered at the evening service. Mr. James Faxon assisted in the service of song with his cornet. Mr. S. O. Saville of Gloucester contributed to the service of Song. The quartette and chorus singing attracted all. Mr. H. M. Moore and Mr. Sayford addressed the meeting. These services have awakened a deep and growing interest. They will be continued during the week closing on Friday evening. The vestry meetings have been somewhat crowded and it has therefore been determined to hold the remaining meetings in the church.

PENALTY FOR SIN.—March 9. Michael Cooney of Woburn, drunkenness. $5.85. Sent to Salem jail.

10. William O'Gorman, larceny, sent to the State Reform School during his minority.

12. Daniel O'Connell, larceny, fined $3.00.

13. Bridget Lane, drunkenness, case continued one week.

14. Dennis Roach of Danvers, drunkenness, fined $5.85.

The Union Patent Medicine Co., are making things hum in Salem. The prices at which they are selling all kinds of druggists' articles, not only patent medicines, but regular drugs and specialties, is a wonderment to those who have been in the habit of paying the prices usually demanded for those articles. Call at their store, next to Mechanic Hall and see for yourself

It may or may not have occurred to some minds in Peabody that cold weather set in for good about the 25th of last October, and there has been no considerable let-up since. Taken altogether it has really been one of the coldest winters on record, not that there has been anything terribly severe, but lots of it.

Hose Company No. 2. gave a clam chowder at their house last evening that was attended by the foremen of the other companies and the engineer as invited guests. A hearty meal followed by speeches and a social time was the order. It was the custom of the old Foster engine Company to hold a chowder on the 22 of February, and propably Hose 2. at the same house will keep up the good old custom.

Daniel O'Gorman who has already a reputation for thieving that is not enviable has at last met his deserts. He in company with a boy named O'Connell was arrested for stealing a beef tongue from the slaughter house of J. B. Thomas, and Gorman was sent to the Reform School during his minority. He was the youth who stole the watch from Mr. Osborn, and bark from Mr. Brimmer only a short time ago.

Freemasons as a rule are a very peaceable set of men or think they are, but their presence in Newburyport last Thursday evening caused quite a commotion wholly unintended by them. A party of fifty arrived in that city by special train and were received by a committee, one of whom chanced to be foreman of Dodge's large factory, where men are on a strike. The strikers and citizens also who saw the foreman leading a long line of men through the city toward the spot, quickly spread the report that Dodge had received a gang of men and the strikers were accordingly filled with consternation. When we reflect that several of Peabody's leading men were in the party we feel sorry that our neighbors should be so affected by them. When the facts became known the excitement was changed to general merriment.

At a meeting of the Selectmen March 10, 1883, the following action was taken concerning the location of a horse railroad track, in Central street.

Voted, THAT the petition of William Mack and Charles Odell, Committee of Directors of the Naumkeag Street Railway Co., "For a suitable and convenient location for an extension of the track of said company from its present terminus in Peabody Square up Central street to the junction of Andover and Endicott streets," be laid on the table until such time as said Company shall have given a satisfactory bond to indemnify the town of Peabody for any money which said town may at any time be obliged to pay for damages that may occur in consequence of the tracks of said Company being in the streets of said Town. And also to pay any judgment that any inhabitant of the town has or may hereafter recover against said Company by reason of any accident to such inhabitant.

Poet's Corner.

The Shamrock.

The following lines on the shamrock were composed by a blind girl residing in the city of Cork:

The spreading rose is fair to view,
And rich the modest violet's hue,
Or queenly tulip filled with dew,
And sweet the lily's fragrance;
But there's a flower more dear to me,
That grows not on a branch or tree,
But in the grass plays merrily,
And of its leaves there are but three,
'Tis Ireland's native shamrock.

My country's flower, I love it well,
For every leaf a tale can tell,
And teach the minstrel's harp to swell
With praise of Ireland's shamrock;
The emblem of our faith divine,
Which blest St. Patrick made to shine,
To teach eternal from sublime,
And which shall last as long as time,
And long as blooms the shamrock.

Oh! twine a wreath of shamrock leaves
They decked the banners of our chiefs,
And calmed the Irish exiles' griefs,
So powerful is the shamrock.
The muse inspired with words of praise
The poet of our early days,
To write in many a glowing phrase,
And sing in powerful, thrilling lays,
The virtues of the shamrock.

He who has left his Island home,
Beneath a foreign sky to roam
And in a foreign clime unknown,
How dear he loves the shamrock.
When on the Feast of Patrick's Day,
He kneels within the church to pray,
For holy Ireland, far away,
He feels again youth's genial ray
While gazing on the shamrock.

The brightest gem or rarest flower
That ever bloomed in Eastern bower,
Possessed for him not half the power,
That dwells within the shamrock.
Sweet memories, like refreshing dew,
The past with all its charms renew;
The church, the spot where wild flowers grew,
The faithful friends, the cherished few
He left to cull the shamrock.

Land of the West, my native isle,
May Heaven's love upon thee smile,
And banish foes that may beguile
The lovers of the shamrock.
May God forever cherish thee
In peace, and love, and harmony,
And knit the bonds of unity—
Thus pray thy children fervently,
For Ireland and the shamrock.

"He Knoweth the Way That I Take."

I know not—the way is so misty—
The joys or the griefs it shall bring,
What clouds are o'erhanging the future,
What flowers by the roadside shall spring;
But there's One who will journey beside me,
Nor in weal nor in woe will forsake;
And this is my solace and comfort—
"He knoweth the way that I take."

I stand where the cross roads are meeting,
And know not the right from the wrong;
No beckoning fingers direct me,
No welcome floats to me in song;
But my guide will soon give me a token,
By wilderness, mountain, or lake;
Whatever the darkness about me,
"He knoweth the way that I take."

And I know that the way leadeth homeward,
To the land of the pure and the blest,
To the country of ever-fair summer,
To the city of peace and of rest;
And there shall be healing for sickness,
And fountains, life's fever to slake;
What matters beside? I go heavenward,
"He knoweth the way that I take."

Men's Wicked Ways.

He kissed me, and I knew 'twas wrong,
For he was neither kith nor kin;
Need one do penance very long
For such a tiny little sin?

He pressed my hand; that wasn't right—
Why will men have such wicked ways?
It wasn't for a minute quite,
But in it there were days and days.

There's mischief in the moon, I know;
I'm positive I saw her wink
When I requested him to go—
I meant it too, I almost think.

But, after all, I'm not to blame;
He took the kiss. I do think men
Are quite without a sense of shame.
I wonder when he'll call again!

Selected Story.

The Pride of the Sea.

The ocean steamer Ethiopia ploughed her way through the angry, ruffled sea.

She seemed a being of impulses and feelings, and tormented at the waves retarding that progress, raised her iron bow high in the air and mournfully plunged it deep, deep down, raising a foam which disdainfully cast aside as unworthy of her notice.

On deck, many were watching the wild scenes and shuddering at the vivid flashes of lightning that seemed to laugh at their peril.

Suddenly the ship gave a heavy lurch to leaward, and a young and white-clothed form was plunged headlong into the sea.

The air became more dismal with her piteous, heartrending shrieks.

'Woman overboard!' sang out the man at the wheel.

'My daughter! My daughter! My fortune to the man who saves her!' cried an old man, as he rushed wildly to the vessel's side. 'Won't anyone save her? Oh, Heaven, have mercy!'

A man plunged through the air, struck the sea head first, and then began a battle between the water and a human being.

'Keep up, girl! I'm coming!' he cried.

He reached her—the mad waves revengefully pushed him aside—she sank.

A boat was lowered from the steamer.

Volunteers were plenty.

Everybody was on deck, watching this unequal struggle.

He reached her—she desperately encircled his neck.

He realized that both would sink, pushed her away, and disappeared from sight.

An angry wave overwhelmed them; it broke away.

He had conquered, and, 'treading water,' held above the surf, her pale face turned to the vessel.

A loud, hearty huzza rent the air; everyone breathed freely.

The boat neared them.

In a few moments they were safe on board once more.

'Heaven bless you, sir! Oh, my poor child, are you dead?'

The agonized father lifted her from the sailor's arm, and turning to him, said, 'Name your reward. I am your debtor for life.'

'Here is my reward, sir—the saving of a life!' answered the dripping sailor, his form erect and eyes flashing.

'My brave Edwards, here's a tumbler of brandy. Go below and change your clothes, and then come aft!' said the old captain, as he shook Edward's hand.

The passengers had already started a subscription for him.

The father of Anna, General James Mortimer, headed the list with his check for a thousand dollars.

The money collected was given to the captain, who sent a sailor to order Samuel Edwards to come to the first cabin.

As he entered, all eyes were upon him.

He was a splendid specimen of perfect manhood—tall and athletic.

'Mr. Edwards,' Anna spoke, 'you have saved my life, and I thank you from my heart!'

Tears came; she could say no more.

'Samuel Edwards, for thirty-five years I have crossed this ocean, and I never saw a braver man, nor witnessed a more heroic act. These gentlemen and ladies have made up a purse which they wish you to accept as a remembrance of this occasion.

And the captain held out to him the money.

With arms folded and head erect, he turned to the captain and passengers, and replied, refusing to touch the money:

'Captain, ladies and gentlemen, I thank you for your present but I do not need it. I simply did my duty. This is my second voyage across the ocean, and when I reach America it is my last. Again, ladies and gentlemen, I thank you, but I cannot take money for saving a human life.'

He again bowed, and was turning to leave, when Anna approached him with her father by her side, and said, softly, 'If you will not take the present of money, will you accept this ring? It was my mother's; I love it as a memento of her devotion to me.'

She handed him a turquoise ring, with a circlet of diamonds forming the letter M.

'Mr. Edwards,' her father added, holding out his hand, 'I reside in Park Lane, Boston. Will you be my guest when you arrive in Boston?'

'Miss Mortimer, your kindness overwhelms me. I will preserve this ring with my life. I thank you from my heart for it. General Mortimer, I hope time will prove to you that I am a gentleman by birth and education, though reduced by poverty to my present state. I will with pleasure accept your hospitality. Good morning, ladies and gentlemen.'

'Stop, Edwards!' said the captain. The conversation between Mr. Mortimer, Anna, and the young man had been conducted in a quiet tone, and the captain's action now was the offspring of a private consultation with the other passengers. 'Stop, Edwards! You are discharged as a seaman, and are now my guest. Steward, assign Mr. Edwards a state-room.'

Edwards was overwhelmed.

The good ship Ethiopia ploughed her way tirelessly on.

The storm, discouraged at its futile efforts to master her, moved away to other climes, and that night the ocean was as smooth as a lake.

Edwards became the hero of the hour, and his quiet, gentlemanly deportment won the admiration and respect of the passengers, who comprised some of the best and wealthiest of Boston society, returning from a visit to the Old World.

General James Mortimer was a wealthy patrician, who had bee abroad with his daughter for his health.

Anna was not a beauty, but she had a quiet dignified grace which, with a gentle, loving disposition, made her the queen of many a heart.

She was not engaged, though she had had many suitors.

As they drove up to their home on their arrival—the news of her miraculous escape having preceded her—the servants met them with a smile of thankful joy in their faces.

They were old and trusted servitors.

Anna and her father entered the library, when he, handing her a note, said, 'Anna, Mr. Edwards gave me this note as I was leaving the vessel; it is for you.'

Anna read:

'Miss Anna Mortimer: Please say to your father that upon reflection I have regretfully concluded to decline his invitation to accept his hospitality. Circumstances uninteresting to you preclude the possibility of my availing myself of the honor he has conferred on me.

'With heartfelt acknowledgments of your kindness, believe me, very respectfully yours,

'Samuel Edwards.'

'Oh, papa, this is too bad! What has happened?' was all Anna could say, disappointment and regret in her voice; for during the last few days of the voyage the young people had been much together, and from admiring her hero she had come to find him indispensable to her happiness.

'Happened, pet? Why, nothing that I can see. Probably he is afraid we may think him intrusive, and out of delicacy he declines an invitation that, under other circumstances he would accept. Anna, I like the fellow. He is bright, educated, and has considerable tact. Suppose you write him an invitation? Then he would come, I am sure.'

The General only desired to evince his gratitude—nothing more.

He could not see or know that he was aiding his daughter in an act which, in her timidity and bashfulness would have seemed an impossibility.

Anna needed no second invitation to carry out her father's suggestions; so she wrote to Edwards, expressing her regret at his inability to accept their invitation, and asked him as a favor to herself to call on them before he went away.

She knew he was going away—something told her so.

He was going because he was afraid she might not love him.

His actions on the last day they were on the vessel plainly told her this.

She despatched her letter by a messenger, who returned only to say that he had gone.

'Gone where?' she anxiously inquired.

'The gentleman said, miss, he was going to Scotland.'

'To Scotland!'

It was even as she thought.

Now she knew even too well that he was very dear to her, so dear that she would have liked to hold her hand out to him and say 'Stay! Stay for my sake!'

But would he stay?

Did he really love her?

If so, why had he gone without a word?

He was too proud to ask for her love—that was it.

These and a hundred other perplexing, heart-moving questions filled her mind.

She was unused to care, almost childish in her whims and loving impressions, and she could not look at this trouble from any but a selfish point.

Her worried heart became more and more entangled in the meshes she was weaving, and she was unequal to the burden.

She had no one to whom she could go excepting her old and doting father.

Yet she could not tell him all; she was ashamed to own that she loved a man because he had saved her life—a man who was a common sailor, of whom she knew absolutely nothing.

She bravely concluded to suffer alone.

Poor little injured soul!

She thought of martyrdom, and consoling herself that she was a martyr, sought her room and wept.

* * * * * *

Two years from the day that Anna wept vainly for her lover, she gave a party to a number of ladies and gentlemen, members of an art society of Edinburgh, who were on a visit to Boston.

Two years had brought no change in her old feelings.

She was still true to the man who had saved her life.

He had written her once, just subsequent to his leaving, that was all, yet that letter she guarded with a jealous care.

Her love-dream was not o'er; she had grown stronger, more resolute, and more than ever convinced that with him and him only could she be happy.

Her father knew nothing of her trouble; he knew only that she had changed.

From being a lively, childlike girl she had grown to be a woman—a woman with a purpose, who had set out to accomplish a task, and was determined to do it.

To-night a gay assemblage met at her residence.

Great painters and musicians were there, and all were commingling in the joy and pleasure of the hour.

Men and women told of struggles, of privations, of exertions that had brought them to their goal, and all felt that they were bound by tie of success and past adversity.

'I am glad to hear you say, Mr. Rappelo, that the paintings of that new artist, Mr. Gordon, have scored a success. I believe you told me he had been offered five thousand dollars for a single picture.'

'Yes, Mrs. Adams; not only has he been offered a handsome price for the painting, but I understand that the art society of Liverpool have offered him an additional sum for a copy of it.'

'What is the subject of the picture, Mr. Rappelo?'

'It is a marine scene; a young girl struggling with the waves, and her rescue by a sailor—Are you ill, Miss Mortimer?'

'No, sir—only a spasm—I am subject to them. But about the picture; who did you say was the artist?'

'I believe his initials are Samuel E. But you are certainly ill, Miss Mortimer?'

She had risen from the table where they were sitting, and excusing herself for a moment, passed into another room.

Hastily taking a telegraph form, she wrote:

'S. E. Gordon, artist, Edinburgh: I will give ten thousand dollars for your marine view; I must have it. Answer. Anna Mortimer.

She dispatched this to a telegraph office and rejoined the company; but her whole manner had changed.

She seemed a different woman; her features wore an anxious, longing expression, as if she were expecting something which she was doubtful about.

'Are you better, Miss Mortimer?' inquired one of the guests.

'Oh, yes! It was only a passing chill—I am better now. Miss Stacy, will you and Mr. Rappelo favor us with a duet?'

'Certainly, Miss Anna; what shall it be?'

'Anything you please,' she answered, affecting a tone of gayety.

'Have you heard any of Mr. Gordon's popular music? He is a composer as well as an artist. His last song is called 'Anna, the Pride of the Sea.' Why, Miss Anna—'

There was a general exclamation of dismay; the girl had fainted.

The next morning, as Anna and her father were seated at breakfast, a servant handed her a telegram.

Hastily tearing up the envelope, she read:

'Picture sold, but artist not. Can I hope for a welcome and reward for the dreary past?

'Samuel Edwards Gordon.'

Forgetting the presence of her father, Anna exclaimed:

'Yes, dearest, yes!'

'Why, Anna! What is the matter?' asked her father, as he glanced from his paper.

'Nothing, papa; only I am very happy.'

A few minutes later she sent this message:

'Yes, more than a welcome, if you will come immediately.

A month later, while Anna and her father were at dinner, she said:

'Papa, Mr. Edwards will be here to-night by the steamer. I have invited him. Will you go with me in the carriage to the landing?'

'To the landing, child? Why, Anna, that isn't very dignified.'

'Papa, I cannot help it; I must tell you the truth. He has won my heart, and for over two years I have patiently kept my secret, and hoped against hope. Mr. Gordon, papa, the great artist, is my Samuel Edwards, and he has asked me by letter for what he already possesses, and I—undutiful girl that I am!—have given my consent without yours. Forgive me, papa, if I have done wrong, but I could not help it!'

'Done wrong, pet? No—yes—well, I am perplexed. I knew this must come sooner or later, and now that it has come, I presume I must bow to the inevitable.'

'Oh, you dear, good papa! Get ready at once and we will start for the landing.' And then in a semi-serious tone, as she kissed him, she added, 'Prepare to receive your new son!'

* * * * * *

Two months later they were married at the home of the bride's father.

'So, sir,' said General Mortimer, after the ceremony, 'you had a motive in saving my daughter's life? A fine fellow you are. Refuse money, only to take my all!' Then, turning to the assembled company, he said: 'These two truants, who have spliced themselves, as the sailors say, were mated on the ocean, and now they have checkmated their father on the high-way of ambition and love. Forgive them, kind friends; they have only stepped into the noose of—"

'Of happiness, love, and peace, father!' interrupted the bridegroom.

And so the 'Pride of the Sea' became the bride of the artist.

Miscellaneous.

The new and palatial steamer Pilgrim, built and owned by the Old Colony Steamboat Company, is the largest steamer ever constructed for Sound service. It is furnished in the most luxurious manner, and will be carpeted by Messrs. John H. Pray, Sons & Co., who have had special designs made. The finest quality of Lowell Wilton, handsomely bordered,' will be used throughout the main saloon, also on the ladies' saloon, Brussels carpets for dining-room, staterooms, etc., taking a total of about 6000 yards. The Messrs. Pray are to be congratulated on receiving this the largest contract of the kind ever awarded.

The steamship Queen of the National Line arrived at its dock of West Houston street Saturday, Feb. 21st, bringing on board nine of the twelve thorough-bred horses shipped from London for Adam Forepaugh's Hippodrome. Quite a menagerie, booked for the same show, also came on the same vessel, the terribly rough weather on the passage being responsible for the death of three of the thoroughbred horses and an ostrich.—New York Truth.

The gross earnings of the Eastern Railroad for the month of January, 1883, were $22,408. The Boston station is soon to have an electric signal clock, by which all the passenger trains will be automatically signalled to start. The Company will not during the coming summer as in several years past, build any new passenger cars, but will give its shops at Salem up to repair work entirely. Many of the company's old cars will be remodelled, renovated and otherwise greatly improved.

A new rival brass band was hired to play at the funeral of a Connecticut deacon. They were playing a slow and solemn dirge at the grave, when suddenly the tombstone man shot out a blast that started the hearse horses and broke up the whole procession. The leader, turning upon him fiercely, asked him what in the name of all hot places at once he was doing that for? He answered with a smile: "Gosh! I thought it was a note, and it was a hoss fly; but I played it."—Detroit Free Press.

PAPERED VENEERS.

Papered veneers have come to be an important article of manufacture, the extension of the industry being largely due to the new and wonderful process of cutting. The mechanism cuts the logs to lengths of twelve feet, which are then halved or quartered, and bolted securely on a revolving iron table. As the table and wood revolve, the surface of the latter comes in contact with a knife twelve feet long, ground to a razor edge and perfectly true, secured on a rigid iron frame—the entire cutting apparatus weighing about thirty tons. The veneers roll off in sheets at every revolution, of from one-ninetieth to one one-hundred-and-seventy-fifth of an inch in thickness, and of the width and length of the log. There is not the slightest vibration of either the knife or the log, as the sheet of wood in such case would be either broken or take up the spring like a wedge. The sheets are backed with paper.

If you once learn to get the whip-hand of yourself, that is the best education. Prove to me that you can control yourself, and I'll say you are an educated man, and without this all education is good for nothing.—Mrs. Oliphant.

The secrets of life are not shown except to sympathy and likeness.

A SCANDAL THAT DREW.

Says the Boston Courier: The venerable clergyman arose slowly in the pulpit, and glancing around on the thinly-scattered congregation, said in an emphatic tone, in which there was more of sorrow than of anger: "My beloved brethren, I am in hopes that there will be more present next Sabbath, as I will then have occasion to reveal a scandal which has long oppressed my heart. It concerns the members of this church very deeply, and no one who has a regard for eternal happiness should be absent." When the benediction was pronounced the handful of people slowly dispersed, but behold how much good seed a few can scatter. The next Sunday the sacred edifice was packed. There was, indeed, hardly breathing-room when the white-haired sage once more lifted his head above the pulpit cushions, and a silence as of death fell upon the expectant throng. He stood a moment looking upon the unwonted scene, and then his voice in silvery cadences broke the hush of anticipation. "Dear friends," he said, "the scandal I would reveal is this—you will gather in this place in crowds to hear mischievious gossip, but will not listen to the explanations of the inspired word. Now, my children, I offer my resignation. I am going to Europe for six months, and I shall pay my own expenses." But no one of the vast multitude took the lesson to himself; he applied it to his neighbor.

The most profound joy has more of gravity than gayety in it.

The only jewel which will not decay is knowledge.

To the Editor of THE PRESS:

Sir:—I was surprised to see an item in this morning's Advertiser to the effect that there is strong opposition in Peabody to the plan of removing the Lexington monument from the position it now occupies, at the junction of Main and Washington streets. It is of course the plan mentioned and not the opposition to the plan, which excites surprise.

The spirit of iconoclasm, if I may so use the word, has been abroad in the land for some time. Boston, thanks to the strenuous efforts of a few public spirited men and women, has escaped comparatively unscathed; that is to say, with the obliteration of a few landmarks and the renovation of the old State House. But, unfortunately, "the evil men do lives after them," if in no other way, at least in the force of example. There is contagion in the moral, as in the political atmosphere, so that if you check a disease in the city, it is liable to break out in a neighboring town. It would be a pleasing circumstance if a little of that healthful spirit for which Boston is noted, were as catching in the same quarters. The Lexington monument marks a spot and commemorates an event, of which Essex, to mention no wider region, is proud. There were no sturdier men in the Provinces in 1775, than the "husbandmen" of Danvers; and in the excellence of their patriotism they were even contrasted with the "merchants, traders, and mechanics," of Salem. So late as 1835, the chidren of these men were glad to recogonize their virtues and honor their memory. Since 1835 three events, remarkable in the history of the town, have occurred; the organization of the South Parish as a separate town; the substitution of the name Peabody for South Danvers; and the great increase of wealth. But neither of these events can have diminished our sympathy with those who set up the memorial. For surely all the sterling qualities of the South Parish did not flee at the separation of the North; to honor George Peabody was at least an innocent action; and everybody knows that the possession of wealth must increase the gratitude of the possessor for those who established the very conditions of prosperity. No wonder the opposition in Peabody to removing the monument is strong.

I take it for granted no considerations of mere convenience or inconvenience will influence the "Fathers" in deciding the fate of the monument. Though the primary object of erecting such a memorial is to honor the dead, the chief good it does is to remind the living of the possibilities of life. Even such memorial should be allotted a conspicuous position. The Queen's gift to George Peabody you put in the Public Library room, the Soldier's monument in the public square. It is not customary to hide such things. I know that sentiment, however healthful it may be, when put in the balance with horse railroad stocks, is sure to kick the beam,—that is, if stocks choose the scales; but let sentiment choose the scales and the result will be reversed. Happily, in this case stocks and sentiment are not altogether incompatible. If however there be any doubt about the matter, it would be well to enquire into the condition of the town, to ascertain, if possible, whether there be more need of horse railroad stocks as a little healthful sentiment.

A NATIVE.

"Horse-car conductors," says a spiteful writer, "should always be chosen with a view to personal courage, because 'None but the brave deserve the fair.'" It is pre-eminently true that "None but meritorious preparations deserve success." Everybody knows the nature and effects of Catarrh. It is one of the most loathsome maladies, and has been pronounced incurable. Ely's Cream Balm may be described as a gigantic tidal wave which has submerged that theory. This Balm is a pleasant, popular, perfect preparation, and a certain cure for Catarrh. It is not a liquid or snuff, and is easily applied. "I had Catarrh for fifteen years," said C, Z. Warren, Rutland, Vt., "with distressing pains over my eyes, gradually the disease worked down upon my lungs. Ely's Cream Balm cured me." All who use it speak in the same grateful strain.

The April number of Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine contains even more than the usual attractive features. The Rev. Moses D. Hoge contributes "What is Presbyterianism?" being No. IV. of "Religious Denominations in the United States"; the editor, Dr. Talmage, has a characteristic article, "Mending the Bible"; Edwin De Leon continues those deeply interesting papers, "The American Pilgrim in Palestine," etc., etc. There are serial and short stories, a large number of very excellent sketches, some admirably written essays, a sermon by Dr. Talmage, "Homesickness," several poems of great merit; a record of important events, Personal Notes and Comments, Editorial Comments, Obituary Notices, etc. The miscellany is most comprehensive, entertaining and instructive; the number, in fact, overflows with good things, and abounds with illustrations. The price is only 25 cents a copy, or $3 a year, post-paid. Address, Mrs. Frank Leslie, Publisher, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.

Spaulding's Drug Store and get a trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, free of cost, which will show you what a regular dollar size bottle will do.

The story told by the Newburyport Herald of an Essex county Senator-elect who went to the ticket office and inquired the price of a ticket to Washington, reminds us of a Representative-elect who on the first day of the session of the General Court went to the Charlestown State Prison and presented his credentials to a sentinel in the yard.—Lynn Item.

The Peabody Press.

JOHN P. FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers.

THE BOSTON STAR very pertinently inquires "who is this Wiggins, anyhow?" It is evident that he regarded himself as a prophet, if he did descend to such a commonplace theme as to "talk about the weather." Had he taken the course of the somewhat less noted Vennor, and predicted in a general or even in a particular way the storm and sunshine of one month or a series of months, his notoriety would have been, at least, less sudden. But the storm which he foresees is a single one: confined within certain days. It is to be more frightful and appalling than was ever known; and all sea faring men were warned to be on land at the fateful time. The press spread the news broadcast. The fishermen of our neighboring Gloucester remained in port. Devotees in Canada constructed vessels like Noah of old, to be ready for the deluge. And what was the outcome of it all? Nothing but a storm of a few hours' duration on our coast on Saturday followed by a pleasant Sabbath—such a storm as any one of ordinary judgment could safely portend during this month at most any time.

The faith in Wiggins and his prediction shows the credulity of the people in predictions of future events. It shows that superstition is not confined to the sailors, but that much of it is prevalent elsewhere. The life of the sea faring man is hard at best; and it is not to be wondered at that they should judge "discretion to be the better part of valor," and remain in port for these days, even if they did not put confidence in the prediction to any extent. But this is not all. It shows how readily men confide in the sayings of any self constituted prophet, in regard to future events. Let them show but the faintest semblance of probability in their forecast, if they only make sufficiently large claims for their predictions, they find devotees at once. Hence the eagerness which prompts many to seek to know their "fortune," to run after soothsayers and clairvoyants—that they may know, if possible, what the future has in store for them. Let enough of probability be woven into such divination, and it is taken with little allowance. A change is in store for us. Documents not dreamed of are to be unearthed. Letters containing information which will lead to great discoveries are on the way to us. These and similar predictions are taken note of, to the neglect of every day duties, and to the discouragement of business and labor.

A kind Providence has wisely concealed from us the future. It is the part of anything but wisdom to seek to penetrate its mysteries. Least of all to put confidence in the vagaries of those who pretend to unveil them. Such knowledge, if it could be given, would not lead either to our happiness or trust in the infinite goodness of Him in whose hands are the issues of life. The duties and cares of every day life are diverted by confidence in such "predicted fortunes," and our faith is weakened in an overruling Providence, caring for all our wants, and leading us to take no anxious thought for the morrow. The world is none the wiser for the predictions of Wiggins. Had they never been known, there would have been less suffering from the violence of his storm than there has been from the anxiety in many hearts, which could not be allayed until the time of his prophecy had been fulfilled.

IF THE Congress which has just come to an end has failed to do all in its power to relieve the country—and the reduction in the tariff bill is surely not all that could be desired, we may at least be thankful that it has done no worse. The new tariff bill is a commencement in the right direction, and some of its deficiencies will doubtless be rectified by the next Congress.

The stamps on checks, and also on proprietary medicines and matches, are to be removed. This is almost the last vestige of the revenue law which was a necessity during the war. It will be a relief to poor people on the one hand, and the removal of a tax on our business men which, now that competition has narrowed down the profits of many branches of trade, will prove an additional stimulus. This takes effect after July 1st.

October 1st will reduce the letter postage throughout the United States to two cents. We are of the opinion that this will be of benefit to the country and the department itself as well.—It has been a surprise that a measure of such magnitude and value should have passed Congress with so little opposition.

One of the measures which did not pass Congress was the Bankrupt law, and its failure is of great injury to the business interests of this country. Bad as the old law was it was far better than no law at all. A national bankrupt law, uniform in every state, is of advantage to both debtors and creditors. Our traders do not care to give credit in many states where the provisions of the State law are entirely for the benefit of the creditor, and if not wholly so, are difficult for the adjustment of proper and legal claims. It is to be hoped that the next Congress will remedy this—although our merchants have grown weary in waiting for it to be brought about.

AN INTERVIEWER of one of the Boston dailies reports Gen. Butler as saying that Mr. Clarke's resignation was accepted by him to take effect March 1st. We have carefully read Gen. Butler's letter and fail to see how such a construction can be put upon it. Mr. Clarke was desired by the Governor to continue in his office that he might be of service to the newly appointed commissioner in making his report and otherwise initiating him into the duties of his position. No confirmation by the council having been made of an insurance commissioner, we think Mr. Clarke justified in taking it for granted that it was Gen. Butler's desire that he should remain until an appointment was made. We trust the council will not be hastened into confirmation of Mr. Plympton by the arbitrary removal of Mr. Clarke. The position is one of responsibility and great value to the people. He can use power against an insurance company, if so disposed, which would be fatal to its interests, and render the insurance policies held by the people of the State of no avail. A man in this office should be moved by no prejudices, but should protect the interests of the people as well as the companies alike. If Mr. Plympton is not such a man—if his only qualification is that of a successful politician—successful in helping Butler into the Governor's chair, he should not be confirmed. If, on the other hand, he is qualified, the fact that he is a Democrat ought not to stand in the way.

THE ASSURANCE of the completion of the Horse Railroad from Lynn is leading to propositions for the extension of the rails of the Naumkeag street railway. Permission has been desired of our Selectmen for the extension of the latter road up Central street, and we understand that a petition is being circulated in favor of an extension up Lowell street. Both would doubtless be an accommodation to our people, and we should be glad to see steps taken which would lead to their consummation. The fact that an extension up Central street would make an opening at some future time for a road to Danvers, is a point worthy of much consideration. That it has been asked for by the road shows that they realize its value. It would be appreciated by the residents in that part of our town, surely. The rails of the Naumkeag street railway should never have stopped at the Square. It leaves a large portion of our inhabitants at considerable distance from their homes, when at a small additional expense, they could be better accommodated and travel on the road increased. Besides it would show that the road understands the growing needs of our citizens, and is disposed to make a little sacrifice to meet them.

DR. MORGAN DIX of New York, in a course of Lenten sermons, has taken up the divorce question, relative to which he makes some plain statements. He gives statistics showing the frequency of divorces in New England, and shows that they are on the increase. He judges this tendency to be the growth of loose ideas relative to the marriage contract—that it is regarded as a civil contract, merely, and as such can be severed at will. This is in conformity with the views expressed by us previously in these columns. The case with which divorces can be obtained, the haste to enter the marriage state by parties who know well that it need not be for life, is the root of the evil in our social system. Stricter divorce laws added to a uniform law in all the states is a remedy which would go far towards the correction of the evil.

The ladies merino vests that Mr. Peabody sells for 35 cents, are so good that many are purchasing them for next season's wear. They are wise in so doing, for such vests are not sold at less than 63 cents in the fall or early winter. Mr. P. is also showing a line of new style dress and garment buttons that are very attractive. On his button counter we noticed a lot of nice pearl buttons, 50-cent ones marked down to 10 cents, and 25-cent ones down to 5 cents, which if we are any judge, are bargains that no lady can afford to pass; and during these closing-out sales Peabody's is a favorite place with careful, prudent shoppers, and one that no lady is likely to pass by.

Last Saturday a stylographic pen was lost between this office and the Wallis street cemetery. The finder will confer a favor by leaving it at this office.

The Old Lynn Omnibus Line.

The horse railroad to Lynn will of course lead to the withdrawal of the coach line between that city and this town. Mr. Stone has already taken off the noon 'bus' except on Sundays, and has disposed of his coaches in anticipation of the starting of the new line. In this connection, it will be interesting to note the first establishment of the line of omnibuses on this route. Mr. E. F. Burnham put on the first coach March 31, 1862, thus opening a new line to Boston, in connection with the horse railroad from Lynn. This was the first year of the war. The coach made three trips daily, and the first driver employed by Mr. Burnham was Ira Foster.—The starting of this coach line was an event in our town. An invitation was extended to the late Fitch Poole, who was then editor of this paper, (the old So. Danvers WIZARD) to accompany Mr. Burnham on his first trip, together with the three Dartmoor prisoners, Messrs. Hammond, Price and Hill, and we quote from Mr. Poole's account of the trip, in the issue of the WIZARD of April 2, 1862:

On this auspicious day, the schools were not in session, and the young joined in the rejoicing. The chief marshal of the day had an elevated position on the top of the town pump, and proceeded to omit to form the procession in the following order:

Chief Marshal and Aids.
(consisting of the Home Guards of So D.)
Selectmen and Assessors, 10 abreast.
Assistant Assessors. 3 abreast.
Treasurer, (with the Town debt on his back.)
Lamplighter.
Night watch with dark lanterns.
Tithingmen.
Dartmoor Prisoners.
Heroes of Bull Run.
Town Pups in a basket.
Board of Health with a yellow flag.
Fence Viewers.
Teachers retrenched, 4 abreast.
Six Contrabands.
Members of So. Danvers Senate.
The American Eagle.
House of Reprobates.
Mayor of Rockville.
Dead Heads, 12 abreast.
Publisher and Editor of Wizard, followed by postmaster to keep out contraband articles.
Printer's Devil with a mop.
Prudential Committee Dist. No. 9, in a cab.
Rebel Sympathizers, in a sulky.
Fat men averaging 250 pounds.
Overseers of the Poor.
(with ox heads and marrow bones)
Middle aged men.
Town Clerk with "perquisites" in a pill box.
Collector, (with sheriff and auctioneer.)

The early drivers, on this line of coaches besides Mr. Foster, were Frank Goldthwaite, William Southwick and Webster F. Burnham. In March, 1863, W. F. Burnham took control of the line personally, and drove every day on the coaches, being absent but one day from that time until he gave up the line. He put on more coaches, running one through West Lynn and another through Glenmere. The travel at that time to Lynn was large, and during the war for several years Mr. Burnham ran four coaches at six o'clock from this town. He bought out Moses A. Shackley's line from Salem to Lynn, and on Sundays for quite a while ran a coach via Salem from Peabody. Mr. Burnham continued on the line 14 years, until November, 1875, when he discontinued, and for about two weeks there was no communication between Peabody and Lynn by coach. Mr. Burnham sold his coaches to different parties in Lynn and remote cities.

Shortly after, a Mr. Norwood, from Lynn, ran one coach morning and night over the route for a few weeks, when he was bought out by Charles O. Stone, the present proprietor. Mr. Stone ran the coaches for a couple of months, or thereabouts, when he sold out the line to W. H. Perkins, who increased the number of coaches and continued for two years, until April, 1878. During Mr. Perkins' management there was a sharp competition for the travel—an opposition line being put on by Charles Potter, who ran it something over a year. The narrow guage road was then just completed, and tickets were sold through to Boston by the stage drivers, at very low rates. About this time, also, the great revival under Moody and Sankey was in progress, and the low fares this way attracted many visitors to their meetings. At one time the fare on the coaches to Lynn was reduced to seven cents. The agreement between the Eastern and Revere Beach and the raising of the fares between Lynn and Boston, made it more desirable for our people to patronize the steam railroad, and the opposition line was withdrawn. April 1, 1878, Mr. C. O. Stone again came into possession of the line and has continued to run it to this day.

With the approach of Easter, comes the special announcement of Mr. Gallup, the manager of the NAUMKEAG CLOTHING CO., in their new advertisement. They offer as an inducement an elegant Oxford Overcoat for only $7.00. We don't see how they can be made for that price, to say nothing of the cost of the cloth and profit to the manufacturer. This firm are doing a larger business than ever before, and we advise our readers to lose no time in looking over their stock.

WEST PEABODY.—The meeting of the West Peabody Farmers' Club Friday night was of a very interesting nature, President Taylor presiding. The meeting was opened by a song from the Chorus Club. After which a very elaborate account of the last meeting was read by the Secretary. Before proceeding with the meeting, Mr. J. P. King made a motion that Mr. George T. Angel, Ansel W. Putnam, John L. Shorey, David Stiles and N. A. Horton be made honorary members of the West Peabody Farmers' Club, to which the Club responded by a unanimous vote. The question for discussion was Manures, opened by J. G. Walcott, who gave a very interesting talk and threw out many practical hints to draw a discussion from other members of the club. He was much in favor of meadow mud for an absorbent. Spoke of bog ashes as a very valuable dressing for grass. This brought J. S. Needham to the floor. He said he was surprised and more than surprised to see his friend so much behind the times, when so much progress in science had been made since he came on the stage in fertilizers, to advocate the use of mud or bog ashes. Mud is more than 60 per cent water; where do you get your fertilizing qualities? Mr. Spaulding followed. Being a large owner of meadow lands and a large quantity of muck, when Farmer Walcott spoke he felt rich, but when Farmer Needham spoke he felt poor. What is meat for one is bone for the other. J. F. Ingraham asked sharp questions which brought out sharp discussions. J. P. King spoke strongly in favor of muck to put in hog pens and mix with other manures; although the hog manure is of less intrinsic value, yet would produce a larger yield of corn than manure from the barn cellar. His views were well received. Asa Newhall advocated muck as an indispensable article. He thought many crops did better than with clear manure, for different crops want different manures. What is good for one is not good for another. The question was one of much importance to farmers and was handled with a good deal of shrewdness by all that took part in the discussion, and was considered one of the smartest discussions of the season. Mr. N. A. Horton of Salem, will lecture next Friday night on Taxation. The meeting closed with a song.

Next week look out for the grand musical entertainment and dance to be given by the Farmers' Club, which promises to be one of the finest entertainments yet given by them.

An entertainment and "Mum" supper will be given to-morrow evening at the South Lynnfield church, to be devoted to repairs on the church building. There will be recitations by Harry Richardson and Maurice Ramsdell, singing by a quartette, consisting of Miss Carrie Palmer, Mrs. Walter Newhall, Messrs. Richardson and Ray; also by Mr. Webster of Stoneham, assisted by Miss Helen Munroe. Supper will be served free to those who keep "Mum." V.

SO. PEABODY.—The old barn on Lynnfield Street belonging to the estate of the late David Putnam, was torn down last week.

Mrs. Melissa Curtis (wife of Josiah Curtis) died last Saturday night, after a long illness, of Bright's disease and dropsy. Her remains were interred in Cedar Grove Cemetery.

Mr. Alerson Galeucia is stacking a large quantity of wood in the rear of his residence on Lynn St.

Mr. Sylvester Needham met with quite a severe accident at the rock sheds of Mr. Samuel Brown last Friday. In helping another stone cutter turn over a large rock, the edge of it caught the second finger of his right hand and jammed it very badly.

C. O. Stone has taken off his 12.40 trip from Peabody to Lynn.

Messrs. Shaw & Stone are to put in a stock of fresh pickles, salt fish and oysters, in connection with their provision store.

C. A. Wiggin lost a valuable setter dog by poisoning last week.

Last Sunday being the day set by the Pastor for the collection in the Sabbath School, by the scholars, for the furnishing of the carpet, pulpit and furniture, quite a sum was realized thereby. The Ladies' Aid Society are going to furnish the inside blind fixings, and it is intended to hold services in the vestry next Sabbath for the first time. The pastor will preach, and in the evening there will be a praise service, at which a number of brethren from the South Church are expected to take part.

At the meeting of the So. Peabody dramatic club it was voted to give the money realized from their plays to the Sabbath School Library.

Read Conrad's new advertisement and see the bargains he offers in unlaundered shirts, laces and print goods. The show of shirts in his window is surpassingly fine—and attracts the notice of every one who passes his elegant store. The goods are much under price, and at these prices cannot last long.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The suit of the Standard Leather Measuring Machine Company of Boston against Mr. David T. Winter of this town was decided in favor of that company by Judge Gray, assisted by Judge Lowell, in the Circuit Court in equity, on March 2d. Their claim was to cover all machines of whatever form or construction that measure leather automatically by the combination of a system of weights of equal weight placed equal distances from each other; a "Jacguard" mechanism and weighing mechanism with index and pointer. This same company had brought previous suits on the mechanism claiming them as infringements, but finding such claims could not be proven they let the cases go by default, and after getting a re-issue they brought the suit to cover the method as stated above instead of the mechanism, June 9, 1880. To illustrate this more plainly to our readers we will say: Supposing a man invented an apple parer, no matter how many apple parers were invented afterwards, his claim is the idea of paring apples by machine. So with Mr. Winter's machine it is solely his own invention, and some of the best part of his life has been spent upon it. There is nothing like it in the market, and Mr. W. has patents issued covering every point in it not only in this country but in England, France, and Germany. The machine made by the Standard Measuring Machine Company, it is said, is a bungling and complicated affair, and the company have never, that we can learn, made a machine large enough to measure a side of leather; therefore, if Mr. Winter's machine had not been in the market, wax leather manufacturers would not have had a machine to-day. Mr. Winter will appeal the case to the Supreme Court. It is his intention to look out for his customers. He will not manufacture any more machines at present. Mr. W. has friends who will see him through a rightful issue at whatever cost. As one of our largest manufacturers said this morning, Mr. Winter has given us a big thing and it is our duty as men to come together and stand by him in this difficulty.

The Masquerade Party last Friday evening at Temperance Hall, under the management of Hose 4, was very successful. About 35 couples were present and the costumes represented were as follows: Gipsey Girl, Mrs. Stanton; Starlight, Miss Lizzie Berry; Grandmother, Mrs. Horace G. Upton; Garnet, Miss Belle Henderson; Blue Bells, Miss Nellie Galucia; Sunflower, Mrs. Morgan; Nun, Miss A. Allen; Dowager, Mrs. Albert Price. Quite a number of other ladies were present who enjoyed the occasion though not in costume; among the gentlemen present were the following characters: Red Cap Clown, C. H. Stanton; Spanish Muleteer, Geo. F. Getchell; White Cross Monk, F. C. Lord; milkman, A. W. Bowst; Fancy Dress, G. G. Morgan; Also a delegation from a Salem Hose Co. were present, six in number, all dressed in a fantastic costume of the same material, looking like the demons in the play of the Black Crook, and one was hardly able to tell "tother from which." Among those present, not in costume, were Buffalo Dave and Rickety Sam. Take it for all in all it was quite an enjoyable affair.

Mr. Chas. H. Cate, who attempted the murder of Mrs. Anderson recently at Lawrence, and then committed suicide himself, will be remembered as a resident of this town and engaged in the mason business, having built our brick school houses. He was a man less than forty years old, of medium height, with a red face and a fierce black moustache, giving him a very peculiar appearance, so that once seen his countenance would be long remembered. While here he had a daughter, Cora Cate, who was a member of the Bowditch school and in every way a lady like appearing young lady, who afterwards became notorious of Arlington Mills robbery fame. Cate up to the time of his death had not lived with his wife for several years previous. He left four daughters.

A bright little Miss in one of our schools recently, who is very accurate in her studies and apt in her answers, in the recitation class the other day was naming the organs of speech, and in connection with the tongue quoted a reference note saying that cases had been known of persons speaking without any tongue; whereupon the principal smilingly said he "presumed in such cases the persons were women, were they not?" Without raising her voice above her customary low, soft tones, came the ready reply, "No, sir; school teachers."

An unusual degree of sickness prevails. Something like a cold, bordering on pneumonia, seems almost epidemic. Scores of sick persons are longing for spring. "It is almost here. It is a long, long time on the way."

A serious accident occurred on the new town hall yesterday afternoon. Richard Marley, a galvanized iron worker, residing on Harrison Avenue, Boston, fell from the top stage, on the Chestnut street side, to the ground. He, with another workman, was engaged in putting up a copper gutter, when the staging gave way and he came down, striking himself on each staging till he reached the bottom. He appeared to be badly hurt, was injured in the back, and had an ugly cut in his head. Dr. Osborne was sent for and he was carried to the Salem Hospital. He passed a comfortable night, but it was found that two of his ribs were broken, besides serious internal injuries and a bad gash in his head. There are more hopes of his recovery to-day. Mr. Marley was a single man, and a brother of one of the contractors for the tin work on the hall.

The regular meeting of Fitch Poole Council, No. 735, American Legion of Honor, was held last Friday evening at the residence of Commander Dr. F. S. Worcester. The lady friends of the members were received after the business was despatched and a very social time followed. A fine banquet was spread and the company reluctantly separated towards midnight. Arrangements are being made for a jollification to occur soon at which members from Lynn and Beverly with ladies are expected; on this occasion the gold gavel belonging to the order will be passed to Fitch Poole Council for its use awhile.

Mr. H. E. Huntley is canvassing this town for an atlas of Essex county, which is by far the finest and most reliable work in that line we have ever seen. It contains everything of interest and historical value, and includes views of prominent churches, stores, dwellings etc., throughout the entire county. The size of the work is to be 15x18; the maps 18x36. It will be published by George H. Walker & Co., of Boston. Mr. Huntley has already secured the signatures of many of our leading business men, including the banks and insurance offices. We know our citizens will take pleasure in examining the work.

Saturday morning a horse belonging to Erastus Ward got frightened in the Square and started to run. The horse was attached to a team in which was a quantity of hay. Our coupe driver, H. C. Wilson, was promptiy on hand seizing the horse by the reins and was heading him down Mill street. Mr. Wilson lost his footing, and became entangled in the reins, when by a sharp turn the horse brought up solid against Baldwin's Hotel, breaking one of the blinds and checking him in his mad career. It was a narrow escape for Wilson.

Washington Chapter of Royal Arch Masons, which includes in its membership several Peabody brothers, paid a visit to King Cyrus Chapter of Newburyport on Thursday evening last, by special train. The meeting was extremely pleasant, we are told, and included a fine banquet, which was followed by several excellent speeches and poems. King Cyrus Chapter and St. Andrew's Chapter of Boston formed the original Grand Chapter, and the first subordinate Chapter chartered was Washington of Salem.

The contractors for the new town house, as soon as the outside work is done, will put on a large gang and rush the work on the inside of the building along as rapidly as possible. They will remove their office from the temporary shed on the lot to the room of the committee over the PRESS office, and remove their telephone, etc., there also. The room is kept quite comfortable as it is heated by steam.

The organization of the School Committee is the same as last year, Rev. J. W. Hudson being chairman. The Sub Committee for the different schools are, High School, Hudson, Sperry, Osborne; Wallis School, Sperry and Osborne; Center School, Carroll and Littlefield; Bowditch school, Littlefield and Osgood; Out districts, Carroll and Osgood. The building Committee are Carroll, Littlefield and Osgood.

Mr. L. R. Power has opened and stocked a new store at 221 Essex street, Salem, which was lately occupied by the furnishing goods department of the Boston Clothing House. He will be glad to see his old friends and would like to make a host of new ones. Mr. J. T. Bartlett, who has had charge of the Peabody store, will be manager.

Rev. Daniel Dorchester, Jr., son of Rev. Daniel Dorchester, D. D., the well known theological statistician of the Methodist church, will leave the ministry at the close of the present conference year in April, for the purpose of devoting his attention to secular business. He has been in the ministry since 1875.

The Unity Club met last Monday evening at the residence of Mrs. M. S. Clark. The literary exercises consisted of an essay by H. F. Walker, after which a social time was enjoyed.

THIRTY GAMES OF CHESS AT ONCE.

At the Maryland Historical rooms last night Herr Wilhelm Steinitz played thirty games of chess simultaneously in the presence of quite a large audience. The tables supporting the chess-boards were ranged in parallel rows down the middle of the hall, each of the thirty contestants being seated in front of a table. Herr Steinitz, commencing at table No. 1, would make a move and pass to the next, making a circuit in every twenty minutes. In playing, Steinitz invariably leaned on his right arm placed on the table, and in his left hand held an unlighted cigar, throughout the evening. In making a move the distinguished little gentleman would raise the piece and set it down hastily but lightly, reminding one of the I'll-strike-you-with-a-feather gesture, which some years ago was a part of the stock in trade of variety stars. From the outset Herr Steinitz adopted a vigorously aggressive policy, and soon had two-thirds of his opponents in a very bad way. Mr. Julius Hall, Jr., at 11:20 proposed a draw, which Steinitz accepted. At 11:45 Dr. A. B. Arnold also proposed a draw, which was accepted. At 11:45 thirteen of the players had resigned and two were mated. At table No. 8 Mr. Steinitz administered a brilliant mate by sacrificing his queen early in the game. In playing Mr. Steinitz on an average took about one-quarter of a minute for each move. The first opponent to resign was Mr. J. J. Merrifield, at 10:10 p. m. At 12:05 a. m. Mr. Steinitz made an oversight at the table of Mr. A. Sellmar, which the latter promptly availed of, causing the veteran to resign. This is the first time Mr. Steinitz has been beaten in Baltimore. At 1 a. m. the games were concluded, Mr. Steinitz winning all with the exceptions above noted. To try his memory one of the players misplaced the king. No sooner did he return to that chessboard on his rounds than he noticed the change. Mr. Steinitz's most formidable opponent was Mr. Julius Hall. It looked at one time as if the latter would win, and the champion pondered deeply over his moves. The game had reached a point where Mr. Hall had a king, a bishop and two pawns against a king and knight, and was pressing Steinitz hard. He made a slip, however, and Steinitz threw forward his knight, so as to check Hall's king, and a pawn also. He gave a shrill chuckle, and moved on. The game was a draw.—Baltimore American.

LIFE ON THE FARM.

As to its drudgery—whatever has been the case in the past, where there were stumps to be pulled and mortgages to be lifted from almost every field; when it was a long way to market, and the buyer paid for produce "in trade;" when almost all implements were laboriously hewn out at home or clumsily hammered out by the village blacksmith—there is, happily, less drudgery on the farm now, and less need of it every year. Taking the year through, the working hours of a man on a farm are no longer than those of the section hand on the railway or an artisan in the shop, who has his own garden to hoe before breakfast or after supper. The busy lawyer and the doctor in average practice work longer and harder than the farmer. The grocer and the editor and the book-keeper each sees less of his children in their waking hours than the farmer who sometimes envies them their "easy life."

It must be conceded, of course, that the profits of farming are not so large on the average as those which are realized by men who are successful in mercantile life. But, such as they are, they are surer—twenty-fold surer, at least. Large profits are always contingent on large risks.—Prairie Farmer.

IMPROVEMENTS IN CHIMNEYS.

The best chimneys are made by inclosing hard baked glazed pipe in a thin wall of bricks. Such chimneys will not only draw better than those made in the usual way, but there will be less danger from "defective flues." A four-inch wall of bricks between us and destruction by fire is a frail barrier, especially if the work is carelessly done or the mortar has crumbled from the joints. To build the chimneys with double or eight-inch walls makes them very large, more expensive, and still not as good as when they contain the smooth round flues. To leave an airy chamber between them for ventilating, is better than to open directly into the smoke flue, because it will not impair the draught for the fire, and there will be no danger of a sooty odor in the room when the circulation happens to be downward, as it will be occasionally. The outside chimney, if there is one, should have an extra air chamber between the very outer wall and the back of the fireplace to save heat, a precaution that removes to a great extent the common objection to such chimneys. A very large per cent. of fires comes from defective chimneys.

BADLY MIXED.

Some queer complications grow out of the marriage of the Duke of Westminister. The Duke's daughter Beatrice was married to the eldest son of the late Lord Chesham, who has since succeeded to the title, and has borne him a son and heir. Now the Duke himself has married Katherine Caroline, Lord Chesham's sister. The Chesham boy, born in 1878, is the nephew of his new grandmother, who is his father's sister; consequently his grandfather is his uncle. From this it follows that his father, being his uncle's son, is his cousin, as is also his mother. But it must be remembered that, since his father and his mother are both his cousins, he is his own second cousin. Again, his father, being his grandmother's brother, is his great-uncle, and his mother is his great-aunt.

A Perfect Combination with two Salient Advantages—Why it Concerns You.

"There is no mistake about it," remarked Dr. M. F. Flowers, of Gallatin, Missouri, "BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS are one of the neatest combinations ever produced. They have two kinds of advantages over all others, which we may call the minor and the major.—First, they are clean and pleasant to use, never soiling the hands nor the linen of the wearer.—Second, they act quickly and powerfully. I have tried the Capcine Plaster on myself for pneumonia, and on my patients for various diseases, such as Neuralgia, Muscular Rheumatism, Lumbago, Kidney Trouble, etc., and in all cases relief has followed in from three to forty-eight hours.

Dr. Flower merely voices the written or oral opinion of thousands in his profession. BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS are the perfect external application. The genuine have the word CAPCINE cut in the centre. Price 25 c. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York.

A SUDDEN FREAK AND ITS SAD RESULT.

The New York correspondent of the Baltimore American tells this story of a sad descent: Fifteen years ago the daughter of a rich and prosperous man, living in fine style on Fifth avenue, went out in a carriage, ostensibly on a shopping expedition. At Stewart's store she left the carriage, and her coachman waited for over two hours, until finally, becoming anxious, he made inquiries. The young lady had disappeared, and though a great deal of money was spent and much effort made to discover her, there was no trace. Ten years passed, and the detective who had worked on the case very faithfully and anxiously, rose by degrees to the rank of captain. One cold night, just after Christmas, four or five of his officers entered the station with eight or ten intoxicated women in their custody. One or two were crying over their arrest and the prospect of a prison; others were fierce in their oaths at the interference of the police with their orgie, while others again were sulky Standing a little apart from the group of prisoners the Captain noticed a tall woman of about thirty, and he saw at once that she had been beautiful, though now her face was disfigured by a bruise on the cheek and a black welt under the eye. There was, however, an air of refinement about the woman that attracted the police captain, and he eyed her curiously while the sergeant recorded the names of the prisoners. Suddenly the woman beckoned to him.

"Captain, do you know me?" was her question.

"No."

"Didn't you once try to finds Miss Grace ——?"

"Yes."

"Well, I'm her! I ran away just out of pure deviltry, and I've had my full share of it."

"Good heavens! Why did you do it?"

"Oh, I don't know. The notion came into my head, and I obeyed the impulse."

"And where have you been all this time?"

"Right here in the ward, under your nose. You never suspected me, though I saw you often enough."

"And have you not repented of the step?"

"Repented!" and the word thrilled in the captain's ear like the wail of a lost soul. "Repented! Oh, God, yes! But it was too late."

"It's never too late."

"Yes, it is. But it's not too late to die."

And before the captain could prevent she had drawn a small pistol and shot herself. The poor creature lived for two days, and when she died it was in the arms of her father. The mother had died a few years before of grief. These are all true stories, and show how much stranger real life is than fiction.

CONTRASTING CLERGYMEN.

Concerning clergymen, there are two in this city that present a peculiar contrast, says the "Hermit" of the Troy Times. One is Robinson, of the Memorial Church, and the other the itinerant Barnes, better known as "the mountain evangelist." These men were in the same class at Princeton, each being prominent and each giving promise of success. Robinson has become distinguished by his hymn books, which have an immense circulation, and he is pastor of a rich and influential congregation. He has travelled extensively, and is one of the leading clergy in this city. Barnes, on the other hand, has been itinerating among the Kentucky mountaineers, and after "roughing it" for many years has adventured to the metropolis and opened meetings in a public hall. He is poor, and depends on such help as may flow from the kindness and sympathy of the public. These men will do good each in his own way, but what a difference in two fellow students! It is not proper for me to criticise the method of any clergyman, but I am inclined to the opinion that Barnes is not adapted to this city, and the fact that his success was chiefly as a "mountain evangelist" indicates the propriety of renewed application to that kind of work.

THE MINISTER AND THE FORESTER.

A Minister of the Interior, in Germany, who was fond of boasting of his numerous olive branches, while traveling, arrived at a small town in a mountainous district, where he came across a forester, whom he invited to dinner.

"Are you aware," he said, jovially, "that you are dining with the most abundantly blessed father of a family in all Prussia?"

"Am I, indeed," exclaimed the man. "May I ask how many children Your Excellency has?"

"Four-and-twenty," was the proud reply.

"In that case," said the forester, "may I request you to stay over to-morrow and stand godfather to my twenty-fifth?,'

His Excellency's face fell, but he complied with the request of his rival, who had beaten him by one.—Quiz.

If when throwing away his manhood, man becomes a creature more to be dreaded than a beast or venomous reptile, whichever he happens most to resemble, woman, parting with her womanhood, scarcely finds her counterpart even in the most noxious forms of earthly existence.

Contact with the world sooner or later tells a man the truth about himself.

When has a beautiful woman failed to recognize her worshipers?

TO PLEASE HER HUSDAND

Were the words of a Good Lady, Mrs. Hawkins, who has long suffered from the pain common to Chronic Rheumatism. A Woman's Patience and Fortitude Well Shown.

Your reporter found Mrs. Hawkins at 14 Exchange St., New Haven, Conn. "About four years ago," she said, "I was then a resident of Brooklyn, N. Y. I went over one morning to the Jersey City depot to see some friends off who were starting for the west.—There was a strong draft of air in the depot, and in standing by the train talking to my friends I caught a severe cold. I had no more than reached my home again when I was taken with a sudden chill and then fever set in. The outcome of all was that rheumatism settled all over me. I was entirely helpless. From this I have never recovered.—You see my hands what a state they are in. Those are all chalky swellings and my limbs are very bad. While I remained in Brooklyn I tried all sorts of remedies, but I could never gain any relief. My physician said it was no use. I grew very thin and lost all strength. Finally, after coming here, to gratify my husband, I began to take Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY, and my general health has been better than ever before I am stronger, have an excellent appetite, which I did not have for a long time. It has helped my rheumatism, and with a thorough trial I am in hopes of recovering completely."

Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY has been successfully used by thousands. It will build up a system that has been run down by overwork It is the thing for the student and literary man to have at hand, and should be in the home of every mechanic. FAVORITE REMEDY is economical, safe and pleasant. Buy it and try it.

New York Mercury for 1883.

Fully equipped with the finest printing machinery of the world, capable of working off 30,000 copies per hour, the NEW YORK MERCURY will enter upon its commencing January 6, 1883, with a determination to more than ever merit the liberal patronage which has marked its career for nearly half a century. Arrangements have been consummated, both at home and in Europe, to secure for the ensuing year many sterling novelties to increase the already incomparable variety of literary attractions which have always made the NEW YORK MERCURY a welcome guest in every home circle.

FORTY-FIFTH VOLUME,

REDUCED RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

But in order to enhance the already widespread circulation of the NEW YORK MERCURY, the proprietor has determined to reduce the annual subscription rate for 1883 from Three Dollars to Two Dollars and Fifty Cents per annum, thus making it the largest, handsomest, cheapest and best family paper in the United States. Each subscriber will get comprising more than 15,000 lines of choice literature in each issue—equaling the contents of a 35 cent magazine!

THE NEW YORK MERCURY

will be mailed, postage free, for six months, for $1.25, or three months for 75 cents. Sample copies sent when requested. Address

KEEP YOUR SCALP CLEAN.

The best thing out for removing Dandruff is

HEYLINGBERG'S

EUREKA DANDRUFF REMOVER.

It has been thoroughly tested by hundreds of gentlemen, Ladies, and Children, and we have plenty of testimonials of its good results. It is cooling, removes Dandruff, invigorates the roots of the hair, and will quickly produce a strong and beautiful growth in all cases where the roots of the hair are not fully dead, and will stop this unpleasant itching; in fact it is the best hair dressing in use. It is not greasy or sticky, and is warranted free of all oils, and poisins, and will prove the cleanest, safest and most economical Hair Dressing to be found.

Peabody, Mass., Nov. 1st, 1881.

Mr. J. J. Heylingberg, Dear Sir:—Both myself and wife have used your Eureka Dandruff Remover for some time, with the most satisfactory results, and recommend it as being indispensable for the toilet. Yours truly,

FRANK A. BRAGDON.

Many more testimonials furnished if desired. Persons suffering from diseases of the scalp will be attended at the house when desired.

"I ought to have stopped five years before I did; but I thought it wouldn't amount to anything, so I kept on. I was a fool, of course—but who isn't, when ambition and the chance of making money spurs him on? I only hope I shall get well enough to digest another square meal sometime without a rebellion in my stomach."

The speaker was one of the best known civil engineers and mining experts in this country; hardy by nature as a buffalo, but broken down by hard study and the merciless lashing administered to his mind and body by his own hand during the earlier part of his career. At fifty he is prematurely gray, bent in form and dispirited. Dyspepsia did it—Dyspepsia, the self-inflicted curse of the American in every department of toil.

"I am thirty-five years old," writes Mr Charles H. Watts, of West Somers, Putnam County, N. Y., "and had suffered from dyspepsia for fifteen years. Tried everything.—At last gave PARKER'S GINGER TONIC a chance to show what it could do for me. It proved its ability by curing me. I recommend it to all who are suffering from this terrible desease." Mr. G. R. Cole, druggist, of Carmel, N. Y., certifies to the truth of Mr. Watts' statement.

Gloom, despondency, hopelessness, disgust with all labor, sleeplessness, horrid dreams to render bed-time like the hour of execution to a criminal—these are some of Dyspepsia's foot prints. The Dyspeptic knows what Coleridge meant when he said: "Night is my hell." PARLER'S GINGER TONIC cures Dyspepsia, purifies the Blood, disperses Rheumatism and all chronic ailments. Prices, 50 cents and $1 a bottle. HISCOX & Co., New York.

Miscellaneous.

THE EMERALD IDOL.

However humble their own dwellings, the Siamese, who are Buddhists, do not leave their gods to dwell in shabby places. Many of their temples are gorgeous with gilding and carving. Among them all, the most so is the Wat Phoa Kean, or the Temple of the Emerald Idol, which is most elaborately ornamented. The model, according to Mr. Vincent's description, is similar to others, but the workmanship, both exteriorly and interiorly, is of a much higher order.

The walls are covered with admirably executed paintings; the floor is laid over with brass bricks. The altar, built in the shape of a pyramid, about sixty feet high, is surmounted by the "Emerald Idol"—an image 12 inches in height and 8 in width. Into the virgin gold, of which its hair and collar are composed, must have been stirred, while the metal was yet molten, crystals, topazes, sapphires, rubies, onyxes, amethysts and diamonds the stones crude and rudely cut, and blended in such proportions as might enhance to the utmost imaginable limit the beauty and the cost of the admired effigy.

On the altar there are many images, covered with pure gold, whose robes are ornamented with precious stones; extraordinarily formed tusks of the elephant and rhinoceros; beautifully carved marble statues, clocks, golden altar utensils, and garments which belonged to their deceased kings.

Here the reigning monarch worships, and here, also, the nobles take the oath of allegiance. On either sides of the principal entrance stand life size statues, in marble, of Peter, "The Apostle of Jesus Christ," and of Ceres, "the Roman goddess of agriculture."

Near this Wat is a small pagoda, which, in an enormous pyramidal cabinet of ebony and mother-of-pearl, contains the Buddhist sacred book. A carpet made of silver wire lies upon the floor. Adjoining this is a large pagoda, which has required ten years of active labor in building, and which cost some quarter of a million dollars. The interior side of the wall which surrounds the Temple of the Emerald Idol, is covered with gorgeous paintings of old Siamese fables and superstitions.

TAKEN DOWN A PEG.

A modest, pretty-looking girl, apparently about eighteen years of age, while riding in a horse car the other day, was greatly annoyed by a well-dressed young man, who was determined to scrape an acquaintance with her. The young man was of the "masher class" and only had his good clothes and his impudence to recommend him—two qualities which often go together, and which were not passports to the young lady's sociability.

The masher had taken a seat by her side, although there was room enough for him to have maintained a respectful distance. He tried to engage her in conversation by asking about the residences as they rode along, but the girl, thoroughly annoyed and vexed at his familiarity, would simply give the names of the owners and relapse into silence. But he masher, nothing daunted by the curt answers, kept on with his questions.

Finally they neared the fine residence which Mr. W. P. Husband purchased a few months ago on Wethersfield avenue, and the rude fellow, after remarking on the beauty of the place, asked the girl if she knew the owner. The girl's eyes sparkled with a mischievious twinkle, and she blushed prettily as she frankly answered, "Husband owns it.'

The masher's face as he tried to paddle his way out of the dilemma gracefully, was a picture to gaze at. The idea that this very young girl could have a husband, evidently had never entered his head. The few passengers who had witnessed the scene enjoyed his confusion, and laughed outright as he hurriedly slid from the car and started to "hoof it" up town. There is something in a name, after all.—Hartford Times.

A NEW INGREDIENT.

It is Mrs. Cobb's candid opinion that, in some cases, education is not of much benefit to the colored race.

Mrs. Cobb has a colored cook, who says she graduated at a female "cemetery" who can read, and who gives up much of her time to perusing the cook-book. A few mornings ago, the cook, whose name is Mandy, was told to make some cake. A short time afterward she appeared in the parlor with the cook-book in her hands, and said:

"I wants yer to send right off to de store and get some latter to put in de cake."

"Some what?"

"Some latter."

"Latter?"

"Yes, latter. I'se done tole yer four times."

"In the name of common sense, what is latter?"

"I dunno what hit am. I didn't write dis heah book. Hit reads dat a cupful ob de latter should be put in the cake to make hit good."

Mrs. Cobb jerked the book out of the cook's hand, and, at the place indicated, read;

"Mix up the dough with a cup of water or of sweet milk, but the latter is the best."

SEALED UP WITH RUM AND SAP.

That's a curious story from British Guiana. A traveler, in accordance with custom, took a draught from the stem of one of the water-holding plants which thrive in the forest. Not being a blue ribbonite, he was afraid of the sudden chill which the non-intoxicating beverage might create, and forthwith took a "nip" of rum for his stomach's sake. Unfortunately, the liquid he had been imbibing was sap, which has the peculiarity of coagulating and hardening in alcohol. The rum performed its part, and the poor fellow's internal organs became literally sealed up with india rubber, the result being that he died. It may be said that if he had been a teetotaller he would not have been killed in so novel a manner; but neither would he, had he been content to drink his rum undiluted.—London Truth.

Recommended by Physicians.

Dr. W. C. Sylvester says: "I have examined the formula of the Shaker Liniment, and I use it in my family and recommend it to all sufferers from Neuralgia and Rheumatism. It is better than any other liniment."

A. Hanson, Boston Wire Works, 75 to 81 Cornhill, says: "My wife was cured of Neuralgia.—Four applications cured me of Rheumatism, and Mr. Lord, my neighbor, who has been on crutches fifteen years, obtained relief from less than one bottle of the Shaker Liniment."

Chas. Prescott, Merchant, Randolph, says: "Send me three dozen Shaker Liniment. My customers have confidence in it, and I can consistently recommend it."

Dr. U. K. Mayo, 378 Tremont street, says: "It is the most effective remedy that ever came to my notice, and I cheerfully recommend it."

An Old Nurse says: "If the directions are followed, not one case of croup in a thousand will prove fatal."

J. F. Sawtell, 121 Cambridge street, was cured of Rheumatism, and says: "The Shaker Liniment cured me, and I would advise Rheumatics to use it."

The Boston Traveller says: "Such cures (Mr. Sawtell's) place The Shaker Liniment at the head of all Rheumatic remedies."

Mrs. C. A. Sylvester of the Sawin Academy Sherborn, who was cured of Neuralgia of the heart, says: "Its effects are almost magical. I will cheerfully recommend it to my friends."

E. N. Cummings, the well known Sunday-school worker, formerly of Woburn, now of the firm of Welsh & Cummings, Lynn, says: "The Shaker Liniment cured my wife of an Enlarged Joint, and myself of Acute Inflammation."

C. H. Lewis, Framingham, says: "It gave me quick relief for Rheumatism, and it is the best liniment that I ever used."

Hon. A. Maynard, the extensive manufacturer and founder of the town of Maynard, Mass., who was cured of Neuralgia, says: "By the use of the Shaker Liniment I obtained almost immediate relief and unhesitatingly recommend it to my friends."

L. H. Allen, Station Agent at Rockbottom, says: "I received decided benefit from the Shaker Liniment for Rheumatism, and I have not heard of a case of Neuralgia or Rheumatism that it has not benefitted."

L. J. Jefts, the well known manufacturer of Hudson and Boston, says: "I have seen such proofs of the efficacy of the Shaker Liniment for Neuralgia that I heartily recommend it"

J. E. Brnorton, Manager of the "Golden Rule," says: "The Shaker Liniment gave me immediate relief. It is a wonderful remedy."

COLOGNE

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.

For 1883,

SEVENTY-FIRST YEAR.

The BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER will celebrate the completion of seventy years of useful and honorable life on the 3d of March-1883. During that period it has secured and held a high rank among the newspapers of Boston and of the country. To maintain all its honorable traditions, and, by the adoption of every improvement which conservative progress can suggest, to make it in all respects a complete newspaper and a vigorous leader of wholesome public opinion, will be the constant aim of the management. With this object in view, it will print of the day, promptly and fully, as its large and increasing facilities will enable it to do. Its REPORTS OF THE MARKETS for Merchandise and Securities, and its SHIPPING NEWS will continue to be full and accurate. The progress of EVENTS IN THE LITERARY WORLD will be carefully watched, and well-considered reviews of all deserving new publications will be presented. The department of DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL CRITICISM will continue to be full, judicious and impartial, under the same competent direction which has made the Advertiser authority in such matters. The LOCAL DEPARTMENT will present all the important intelligence of Boston, the State, and New England.

ALL THE NEWS

THE WASHINGTON DESPATCHES

are intended to be a faithful transcript of what occurs at the national capital, undisfigured by personal assaults upon public men and as impartial in the presentation of news as it is possible to make them. The FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC CORRESPONDENCE is the work for the most part of persons who reside in the places from which they write, and is consequently devoted to a record of what occurs, rather than to guide-book descriptions of places visited. In the Daily Advertiser is republican. It does not bind itself to accept all regular nominations, to advocate all party measures, or to yield its judgment at the bidding of any caucus or convention. But it does hold that the best interests of the country will be most truly advanced by the ascendancy of the republican party. Believing that great reforms, in the civil service, in the coinage and currency in the system of taxation, particularly in the tariff, and in other governmental matters, are urgently necessary, and that they can best be carried into effect by the republican party, it will omit no opportunity to press upon its readers the necessity of such reforms. But it will also comment in a free and independent spirit upon all topics of the day, foreign politics and domestic concerns, economical questions, and literary, social and religious movements.

Early in the new year the Daily Advertiser will remove to

ITS NEW BUILDING,

246 and 248 Washington street, where its already excellent facilities for the mechanical work of a newspaper will be much improved. The fastest presses and the use of every modern appliance in journalism will enable the management to compete successfully with any other newspaper in the country in the prompt and attractive presentation of news and opinion.

Some of our returned friends from Florida have brought with them as souvenirs of their journey in the balmy South, sets of jewelry made of Alligators' teeth set in gold.

The Danvers Mirror says twenty members of the senior class of the High school went to Peabody Wednesday evening, in a barge furnished by Pillsbury, and spent the evening with Miss Renie Raymond formerly in this class, but now in the Peabody High school. A supper and very pleasant time was enjoyed.

Mrs. Almira Putney, mother of Rev. Albert Gould, formerly pastor of the Methodist Church in this town, with whom she had made her home at Clinton, Mass., for the last year and a half died of apoplexy on Saturday evening, in the seventy-eighth year of her age.

The Woburn Journal, last Saturday, contained the following complimentary notice of one of our respected townsmen: We received a pleasant call from Mr. Stephen Peabody, of Peabody, last Friday who, with his wife, was visiting relatives, the Harts, here. He is an old and substantial citizen of Peabody, Woburn's rival in the leather business.

The drivers and conductors on the Naumkeag Street Railroad are not allowed to leave their car at the square as formerly. They had been in the habit of patronizing Geo. Stevens' and getting warm in his store on a cold day.

The Pat Rooney combination at Mechanic Hall last evening under the management of Mr. N. W. Andrews was a good show and received a liberal patronage. There was a good attendance from Peabody.

There is much that is fresh and interesting to musical people in the Musical Herald for March. W. F. Apthorp discusses Musical Criticism, being the second of a series of Articles, Mr. Edson has a sketch on "Legend of Music," and there is the usual notes and comments. The music of the number consists of a song by Roecke "The Love of Old" and the quartette for mixed voices "God is a Spirit," sung often by the choir of our Unitarian church here. The music alone is worth double the price of the Herald. Price 15 cts., $1.50 a year. Musical Herald Co., Boston, Mass.

NORTH PEABODY.—Mr. G. H. Winchester having disposed of his farming tools, &c., has removed his family to the house of Elijah Wilson preparatory to leaving for the West.

Mr. Thomas O'Brien has been ill for the last eight or ten days, but is improving.

L. C. Hanson has returned from a trip to the West, and he feels much pleased with the appearance of that country, especially the Indian Territory. When he left Kansas last week, the grass had begun to grow, planting had commenced and he could sit out of doors in his shirt sleeves with comfort.

Mr. James N. Ames and family have returned from their recent visit to N. H.

Messrs. J. F. Dale, W. P. Barker and Elijah Wilson have returned from their tour to Florida. they were much pleased with the scenery of the country, particularly the orange groves. They visited Jacksonville, Sanford, San Augustine, and other points of interest; on their way home they touched at Charleston, Richmond, and Washington.

We are pleased to say that Miss Elizabeth Wilson who has been quite seriously ill is slowly recovering. Z.

HOW TO RECOGNIZE HIM.—A young lady friend asks: "How can I tell an editor when I see him?" Why, bless your sweet, sparkling eyes, it is the easiest thing in the world. You can tell him by his august air, by the perfect fit of his clothing, by his elegance of manner, and by his profound silence when surrounded by the common herd of promiscuous society. You may recognize him by the way he spends his money, scattering greenbacks as lavishly as shavings from a planing machine. He generally drives a double team to a park buggy, and makes things hum. He also keeps setters, pointers and a pet bull dog with a brunette nose. He is decked in profusion with the most expensive jewelry, and sports a gold-headed cane with a rose solitaire in the centre. He does not invest in marriage associations, and is as modest as a school girl. But the chief point is, he always speaks the truth. Follow these directions and you cannot make a mistake.—Baltimorean.

The May number will contain the first of a series of papers by Lieutenant Fred Schwatka, the Arctic explorer, entitled, "Among the Natives of the North."

USEFUL AND ARTISTIC CROCKERY.—The Boston correspondent of the Hingham Journal (always interesting) writes as follows, under the heading "Changes of Fashion." "In no instance of change in fashion of household furnishings has the contrast been so marked as in crockery ware, although walls, ceilings, curtains and furniture coverings have changed from light to dark shades. White is cold, snowy and cheerless, and colors, if harmonized, are very effective in interior decorations. The Centennial World's Fair, in Philadelphia, marked this change from white to colored, and as one of the managers of that exhibition says: The revival of the old blue willow crockery ware by Miss Southwick, who had charge of the New England kitchen, awakened an extraordinary interest in that article, and many women, who saw the quaint old table ware of her grandmother's day, could hardly rest without securing some specimens. The resources of Miss Southwick were severely taxed to supply even a single plate, cup or saucer to take home as a souvenir. She received her supply from Jones, McDuffee & Stratton, of Boston, who fortunately had a stock of this peculiar ware. The handsome exhibits of leading English manufactures, with the Japanese displays, excited admiration for decorated table crockery, which has steadily increased and displaced the old crockery. The great demand for these goods encouraged the dealers to carry stocks of the decorated patterns so long in use in Europe, and to-day they make a specialty of them. Competition among the great potteries of Staffordshire has reduced prices of the attractive printed sets, now so much in use, down almost to the value of ordinary white ware."

The directors of the Eastern Railroad met on Wednesday, says the Transcript, and authorized the establishment of a new station, to be called "Bishop's," between Wenham and Ipswich. It is understood that the residents thereabouts, who are anxious for the establishment of such a station, will pay the expense of building it. The directors also adopted resolutions urging the construction of a railway bridge at St. John, N. B.

Adjourned Town Meeting.

Promptly at one o'clock, pursuant to adjournment, the meeting was called to order by the Moderator, Amos Merrill. The following vacancies were filled by the meeting: Nathan Bushby was elected field driver instead of Wm. S. Osborne, declined; H. D. Larrabee in place of B. H. Taylor, declined; John S. Rhodes in place of Andrew Curtis, declined; and Edward Giddings was chosen surveyor of lumber in place of Benj. Beckett, Jr., declined.

The report of the finance committee was then read in detail by Charles B. Farley, Esq., the chairman. On motion of Jonathan King the meeting proceeded to the consideration of each article separately as reported by the committee.

Article 9th, "To determine what amount of money shall be raised for the usual and necessary expenses of the town, when it shall be paid into the treasury, and the rate of interest to be charged on delinquent taxes." The committee recommended the raising of $90,000 by direct taxation, in addition to the state and county tax, and that on all taxes paid on or before Oct. 1st, a discount of three per cent. shall be allowed; on all paid between Oct. 1st and Nov. 1st, one and one half per cent., and from Nov. 1st to Dec. 1st, no discount shall be allowed, and that after Dec. 1st, interest at the rate of 7 per cent. shall be charged. The portion relating to the amount to be raised was laid on the table until the meeting had considered the other recommendations, and that portion relating to the collection of the tax was accepted.

Article 10th, "To appropriate money for the payment of State aid to soldiers and their families." The recommendation of the committee was adopted, viz: that the Treasurer be authorized to hire such sums of money as may be required for the payment of State aid to soldiers and their families.

Article 11th, "To determine what compensation shall be paid to town officers and firemen the ensuing year." The committee recommended that the sum of $4000 be appropriated for town officers, and be apportioned, viz: town clerk $800, and that all fees obtained by him be turned into the treasury of the town; treasurer, $300; treasurer of sinking fund, $100; collector of taxes, $500; overseers of the poor, chairman, $300; assistants, $25 each; selectmen, $3 per day; moderator, $5 per day; all other officers, $2 per day. For firemen, $1900 appropriated as follows: to each steam fire engine company which shall keep up and maintain twelve men, $180; to the hook and ladder company of fifteen men, $225; to hose 1 of twelve men, $180; and to hose 2, 3, 4 and 5 of fifteen men, $225; to chief engineer, $50; assistant engineers, $30; and to each fireman who shall have performed duty for the entire year a sum equal to the poll tax for state, county and town taxes paid by him, his parent, master or guardian. It was also recommended that the engineers see that each company keep up their full complement of men, and that they fulfill their entire duties. They also recommended these appropriations: For fuel and lighting, $200; for the purchase of 2500 feet of hose, $2250; for repairing and replacing hydrants, $500; for ordinary expenses of the department, $3400. After some explanations by Mr. Farley, the entire report in relation to this article was adopted.

Article 12th, "To determine the manner of repairing the highways and bridges." The committee recommended the employment of H. A. Besse, who shall devote his entire time and attention to the town, having the use of the horses and teams belonging to the town, and that he be paid a salary of $1000; that that portion of the town west and south of Tapley's brook be under the charge of William Marshall, and that he receive therefor the sum of $2.50 per day; that the remaining wards, except those under the charge of Mr. Besse, be under the charge of John E. Herrick, and that he receive a salary of $2.50 per day. Mr. Herrick declined being appointed to that position. Mr. Walcott moved that the different portions be taken up separately, which was agreed to, and the first and second parts adopted. In reference to the third part, in relation to West Peabody, Mr. Herrick having positively declined, it was moved that this also be under the care of Mr. Besse. Frank E. Farnham moved as an amendment that the name of John G. Walcott be substituted for that of Mr. Besse. Mr. Farley explained the action of the committee; they had heard the wishes of many of the citizens, and thought it best to report in favor of Mr. Herrick, who had reluctantly allowed his name to be used, but now at the last moment reconsidering his determination. He thought Mr. Besse was the man, under these circumstances, for the position. Mr. Walcott inquired if the committee had given the parties an opportunity to be heard on the matter of their own appointment. They had come to the decision they had reported and nothing further came within their province. O. F. Newhall said the people of South Peabody held a meeting—when he was ruled out of order by the moderator. R. H. Brown stated that this matter was considered by the committee and the question in regard to Mr. Walcott brought up, and his methods, and the amount of his work, discussed; it was thought the town did not get their money's worth; for that reason, that the appropriations might be better used, that they might have better roads, they had come to the conclusion they did. He thought it best now that it be put under the care of Mr. Besse, and that all money under him would be judiciously spent. Mr. Walcott wanted the privilege of asking a few questions, and of showing how the money had been expended by him. If he was to be gagged he should have to submit. (He was ruled out of order by the moderator.) Frank E. Farnham believed there was a difference of opinion, and the matter ought to be before the town, as they decide on the matter. S. F. Blaney preferred to say nothing; had hoped the motion would prevail. He regretted the phase the matter had assumed, but inasmuch as the parties would not be satisfied thus, he moved that its further consideration be laid on the table, which was agreed to. He then moved to reconsider the vote whereby Mr. Marshall was elected, but was ruled out of order. He appealed from the decision of the chair, but the ruling was sustained by the meeting, that having already elected Mr. Marshall, they could not undo their action. Mr. Blaney hoped Mr. Marshall, if in the hall, would withdraw, so that Mr. Walcott could have an opportunity to be heard. The moderator ruled that if the matter of West Peabody be taken up, Mr. Walcott might speak on his own qualifications for the position of surveyor, if no objection was made. Mr. Blaney moved that it be taken from the table, which was agreed to, and Mr. Walcott took the floor. He said he was prepared to show what he had done the past year, and how the money appropriated had been spent in the back wards. After the town meeting last year, he sent up to ward 4, at the hardest gravel pit in the town, on the 21st of March. He worked four weeks; employed five teams at a cost to the town of horse and man of $64 each; had hauled during that time 1750 loads of gravel. He thought no man could go up to that pit two weeks hence and do better. He found he had only $900 appropriated for that portion of the town, and out of that he had to pay $105 for gravel. He had worked four weeks, employed 14 men and six horses, including his own; he went up to Lynnfield road one week—four of them—took 140 loads of gravel in one day. They hauled nearly 3000 loads of gravel from the two pits. He hadn't received his book from the town which gave him an appropriation of $900. They had had previously larger appropriations—two years ago $1100; he defied any one to get the same amount of gravel for the same amount. He asked for more appropriation, and was told by the Selectmen that Besse's salary had been raised. He said in Lynnfield they appropriated $100 a mile and had increased it this year. Here he had only $70 a mile, and had the old Boston road to look out for, where there was more travel than had been in the whole town of Lynnfield since the Concord fight. He had to go home; finding not enough appropriation, and had to leave things as they were. He thought this part of the town did not have the money that belonged to them. S. F. Blaney took pride in defending the action of the committee. There was sufficient evidence for their action. He regretted the action of other parties had placed him in this dilemma. Had hoped Mr. Walcott would have deemed discretion the better part of valor, but as he had opened it for consideration, he felt it his duty to go into it. Mr. Walcott had not touched the vital point. He had cleared his hands, while his head and heart were as much in the mud as ever. As far as the labor of his hands would go, he could find no fault with Mr. Walcott. He spoke in a friendly spirit. Had he a job of this kind to be performed he knew of no one whom he would sooner employ. The question was in reference to his ability to handle the money. He thought Mr. Walcott's conscience would not allow him to deny this. It was the design of the committee in recommending the appointment of Mr. Herrick to give him the work to do, but he wanted to protect the finances of the town, wanted the money to go to the parties it belonged to. It was a tough pill to say it, but Mr. Walcott was so harassed that he could not keep the money long enough to get to the proper spot. It had got to be stopped. It was a dirty job, but he did not believe in electing him to the position. Mr. Walcott said that was plain talk. He meant to have said when he spoke previously that there was one bill unpaid. He admitted that. This bill (reading it) was for 21 1-2 days labor $64.65. Every other bill was paid. This one should have been. He said the method of paying the surveyors was different in this town from that of any other. He proposed to make a motion that in future all money in this direction be paid directly to the men who do the work. Mr. Farley explained that the matter under discussion had been referred to them by the Selectmen; that coming as it did they did not feel at liberty to overlook it. He regretted the necessity of pushing the matter so far, but these were the reasons which moved the action of the committee. The question was put on the substitution of the name of Mr. Walcott, and lost. The town then voted that the matter be placed in the hands of Mr. Besse.

Article 13th, "To determine what sum of money shall be raised for the repairs of highways and bridges, and how it shall be appropriated." The committee recommended the appropriation of $10,000. Mr. Farley explained that he had received a line from F. H. Appleton in reference to an appropriation for the Newburyport turnpike in his neighborhood, but it was too late to consider it. Thought the necessary money could be reasonably taken out of the regular appropriation, if thought desirable by the Selectmen. Mr. Appleton thought an ordinary appropriation would not cover the case; wanted a special one; moved that an additional appropriation of $300 be voted. Edgar Upton moved an amendment that the entire amount be $11,000. Last summer had been a hard year on roads, and thought this additional sum could be judiciously expended.

Jonathan King did not think it necessary to add anything to the recommendations of the committee. If our citizens would take a drive throughout the county, they would find our roads comparing favorably with any others. Thought an additional appropriation improper; would prefer to have the sum reduced. The amendment was not carried, and the amount of $10,300 was voted to be spent.

Article 14th, "To see if the town will appropriate money for lighting the streets." The committee recommended the appropriation of $2500, which was agreed to.

Article 15th, "To see if the town will appropriate money for a day and night police." The committee recommended an appropriation of $5000, together with the fees from the officers. Jonathan King moved the substitution of $4500 for the amount of the committee, and gave his reasons. In page 11 of this year's town report he noticed an expenditure of $2300 for day and Sunday police. He thought this amount in the daylight not necessary to keep the people of Peabody straight. We have a civil people. He had no objection to the amount recommended for night watch, but was in favor of cutting off $500 from the day police.

R. H. Brown hoped the amount would not be reduced. Mr. King lived where it was orderly and quiet. Did not think of the people near Salem, from which place men came up to break the peace. It is better for our good order to have a police day as well as night. Mr. King thanked his stars that he did not live in that part of the town where it takes $2300 to keep them straight in open day light. He thought there was not the need for day police that there was for the night. Mr. King's substitute was adopted 74 to 66, and the amount appropriated was made $4500.

Article 16th, "To determine what sum of money shall be appropriated for the support of schools." The committee recommended the appropriation of $23,500, and for truant schools $500, together with the unexpended balance of last year, which was adopted.

Article 17th, "To determine in what manner the money arising from the surplus dog fund and the town's proportion of the income of the Massachusetts School Fund shall be disposed of." It was voted that it be appropriated for the support of schools.

Article 18th, "To see if the town will authorize the Town Treasurer to hire money the ensuing year." The treasurer was authorized to hire money in anticipation of the taxes, giving town bonds for the same, by a vote of 47 in the affirmative; and also to renew or replace loans, by a vote of 40 in the affirmative. The recommendation of the committee that $600 be appropriated for Cedar Grove Cemetery, was adopted.

Article 25th, "To see if the town will appropriate money for the purpose of extending, repairing and carrying on the water works." Under this head the recommendations of the committee were for the appropriation of $13,000 to be distributed, viz: for the ordinary expenses of the department, $6000; for the improvement of the reservoir $4000; for extensions in Jacobs and Ash streets $650; in Bowditch Court, $550; in Goldthwaite's Court, $400; for connection of pipes on Chestnut street $400; other expenses $1000. Frank E. Farnham said that different sections of the town had been heard by the committee in reference to the extension of the works; he desired to make a motion that the water board have power to extend the pipes wherever five per cent net could be returned on the investment, and he moved that a sum not exceeding $5000 be appropriated for this purpose, to be used at the discretion of the water board, wherever five per cent would accrue from the investment.

Edgar Upton thought the finance committee the best tribunal; they had the water board before them, and the citizens could form their own opinions. Thought we had better go on as we had begun. Frank Farnham did not wish the finance committee to usurp the place of the water board; but rather than bring out conflicting opinions he thought this would end discussion; the amount to be expended was limited, it could not exceed it, and he could see no reason why the vote should not pass.

Frank Marsh said there was one objection to the amendment of Mr. Farnham, in reference to the five per cent. to net the town. He thought it should be left to the judgment of the water board without that provision. They might think it best to extend the pipes where it would not pay five per cent, or even four; he moved to amend by striking out the words five per cent. R. H. Brown stated how the committee had arrived at the decision. A number of petitioners had appeared before them; they had ascertained beforehand how many water takers there would be, where it was proposed to extend the pipes, and where it was deemed sufficient, it had been voted to extend. Their facilities for information were as good as could be had. The superintendent of the water board was on the committee; his judgment was full; the town did not want to act hastily; they did not wish to go on without some guarantee; not be like Beverly, and lay a great debt on the town by going into indefinite expenditures; he thought where the extensions were asked for, was as far as they ought to go.

Mr. King liked the remarks of the last gentleman. His opposition to the high service came from the fact that he knew as soon as the pipes were laid they would want to extend them into the country; he had been asked to sign a petition to extend the pipes where he himself had property; he was not selfish enough to sign it; when the water board could see it for the interest of the town to lay the pipes in that direction, he should not object. Was willing to leave it to the water board.

Rev. Mr. Colwell hoped the appropriations would come up separately. The plea that the water would pay was right as far as it went. But that was not the whole of it. It was right that the property should be protected. Last year petitions from his part of the town were sent in for the extension of the pipes; they were put off a year; now some are granted, others not; he did not believe in the policy of its being sold to the highest bidder; he thought if the people were to be taxed in its support they should have the benefits of all the good things. The people in his part of the town were not destitute of spirit. The principle of taxation without representation was what our fathers fought for. He would not urge wild action, but he thought if the articles were brought up separately they would be given a respectful consideration.

Mr. Marsh said he lived in the country as well as Mr. King, but he should have to oppose him; his amendment was the same question, it would only give the board a little more liberty; if they wanted to lay the pipe where it would yield only 4 1-2 per cent. they could do so. Parties would be induced to build if they could be assured of the high service rates. The board should not be hampered. There were a good many who expected to reap benefit from the service, and now that we have the water, it is not right that the board should be restricted to five per cent. Mr. Brown was afraid the matter would get so mixed that the town would not get the benefit desired by the committee. Mr. Farley thought there was a misapprehension on the part of Mr. Farnham. He was not aware that any persons who had appeared before the committee were unprovided for in this article. No one had been refused in this article, excepting on Liberty street, and the additional appropriation of $1000 would amply provide for this. Mr. Farnham was obliged to the gentleman but he thought he understood the position clearly; he made the motion to save discussion; had added the limitation of five per cent. out of respect to the finance committee. Mr. Farley desired to know if the object could not be attained by an increase in the appropriation of $1000, and not apply to the other items. There was the amount for the connection of the pipes on Chestnut street. It was not expected that 5 per cent. or any per cent would accrue to the town from such connection; but it ought to be done. Mr. Farnham agreed that it was expedient for the finance committee to direct the action; he had no objection to leaving off the five per cent; though we should get just as near to it as we can; he referred to the extension proposed on Lynn street; 2500 had been asked for, but not recommended; he wanted to put the water board in condition to extend the works where it was thought desirable by them.

S. F. Blaney said that the water works had got where it was not necessary for a spokesman; they could speak for themselves; personally he had nothing at stake; would be glad if the town dropped him from the office he held. The argument of Rev. Mr. Colwell was a false one; it would be right, provided the citizens were taxed for their support, but they were not. To-day the water works are self supporting. The little town of Danvers taxes itself $5000 for the use of its water. Here all the water-sprinklers and fountains are in use at a cost of not a cent to the town. It cannot help continuing in the future. Thought the finance committee had acted conscientiously. Hoped the town would lay out some policy for the water board this year. Mr. Farnham's amendment had that element in it that he hoped some action would be taken upon, and establish a policy which would be liberal and pay for taking care of it. If the town wished to limit the board to 4 per cent. they would be willing to abide by it. He thought it however, a good move to establish a policy of percentage; the water board would be relieved of a bore; if they were left without any per cent. they might be induced to act where they otherwise would not. If the town pursued the correct policy he was convinced that the water works would prove to be the "goose that laid the golden egg."

Mr. Farnham thought his amount of $5000 not enough, and wanted to make it $10,000, and moved to substitute that the water board have this amount, to be used at their discretion wherever 4 per cent. interest, instead of five, should accrue. He also stated that he proposed this amount in place of all

Poet's Corner.

[For The Press]

"Non Omnis Moriar."

In the flash of youth's glad spring-time,
When the joyous days flit by.
Sometimes comes the solemn question,
"Will the spirit ever die?"

Oftimes do we ask this question,
In the strength of manhood's prime,
And it comes with fearful meaning,
As we leave the shores of time.

Oh, too often does this question,
In the soul no answer find;
Doubt or mad denial haunts us,
Darksome fears with terror blind.

Yet at times in hours of quiet,
When the soul is at flood tide,
Voices as of choiring angels,
Bid us lay our fears aside.

And these steal through all our being,
An assurance strong and deep,
Till we know, beyond all doubting,
That the soul will never sleep.

As we feel that when we enter
The unknown beyond the tomb,
Brighter still and even brighter,
Will the soul immortal bloom.

Trusting still and still believing,
In the Father's care and love,
Let us heed these angel voices
Summoning to realms above.

Let us wait with glad assurance,
Deeming that no fearful day,
When the soul, its wings unfolding,
Enters on its heavenly way.

Smile When'er You Can.

When things don't go to suit you,
And the world seems upside down,
Don't waste your time in fretting,
But drive away that frown;
Since life is oft perplexing,
It is the safest plan,
To bear all trials bravely,
And smile when'er you can.

Why should you dread to-morrow;
And thus spoil your to-day?
For when you borrow trouble
You always have to pay.
It is a good old maxim,
That should be often preached—
Don't cross the bridge before you
Until the bridge is reached!

You might be spared much sighing,
If you would keep in mind,
The thought that good and evil
Are always here combined.
There must be something wanting,
And though you roll in wealth,
You may miss from out your casket,
That precious jewel—health.

And tho' you're strong and sturdy,
You may have an empty purse:
(And earth has many trials
Which I consider worse;)
But whether joy or sorrow,
Fill up your mortal span,
'Twill make your pathway brighter,
To smile when'er you can.

Free.

A dove lay caught in a fowler's snare;
By cruel cords her wings were pressed,
Ruffled was all her plumage fair,
And her heart beat fast in her panting breast.

But the fowler loosened each cord and twist,
He smoothed her ruffled plumes, and then
Her snowy bosom he gently kissed,
And bade her seek the skies again.

And the fowler sighed: for, safe and fair,
In summer skies, he knew that she
Would think of the cord and the cruel snare,
But not of the hand that set her free.

Selected Story.

Two Wedding Days.

BY R. P. H.

Everything had been duly and properly arranged for our wedding. The engagement of Miss Nelly Bartley to Mr. Bertram Langley had been announced in the fashion column of a leading 'society journal,' and the wedding-day had arrived.

I am Bertram Langley, commonly called Bert; and while I confess to being most sincerely and entirely in love with my little Nell, I must add, I had been quite annoyed at the persistence with which she insisted upon a grand wedding.

There was another cause of annoyance, too—Nell's father was a rich man, and able as he was willing to furnish his daughter with as much finery as she might desire; while I, on the contrary, was a man with his way still to make in the world.

When I asked Mr. Bartley's consent to our marriage, he was at first just a little inclined to find fault with my financial condition.

I only mention this to show how a suspicion once entertained will return on the faintest invitation, and not unfrequently upon none at all; for the time came when Mr. Bartley not only entertained this unjust surmise but eagerly hugged this foul thought to his heart, and grew murderous in that vital organ towards me, Bertram Langley—as innocent a man as ever lived.

The day before the one fixed upon for our marriage, Nell and I had our first quarrel.

I called to inform her of the smallest posssible hitch in the church machinery.

I waited full half an hour in the drawing-room, cooling my heels and warming my wrath, before Nell rushed in.

'What is it, Bert?' she asked, breathlessly. 'I'm awfully busy!'

A spark is enough to ignite a whole city if it only falls upon highly inflammable material, and a word is quite enough to raise a furious temper in a man who is aching to get mad; so I answered, curtly:

'If you are in such a hurry, it is no matter what I wished to say.'

Nell opened her lovely brown eyes in surprise.

'I've got to select some lace,' she explained, 'and Kate can't wait.'

'Neither can I!' I retorted shortly, pulling on my gloves. Then after a moment I added, 'You think a good deal of furbelows, don't you?'

'Indeed I do!'

'I am afraid you will have to do with vastly less when you are married.'

Nell tossed her head saucily.

'All the more reason I should be allowed to enjoy these papa gives me.'

The shot went home.

I bit my lips, but managed to keep a cool out-side, though inwardly I was boiling.

'It is not to late to retreat, I said, coolly. 'If you repent your bargain, there is time to escape.'

Nell's eyes grew big with horror at the idea.

'Indeed, it is entirely too late!' she burst out. 'Why, everybody knows it! All our set have cards! I should die of mortification to have it put off now! We must go now. I have no fancy for being a laughing-stock for everyone.'

'Better be laughed at a week than miserable for a lifetime," I retorted.

Nell opened her lips to answer, but just at that moment Kate, Nell's sister, put her head in at the door.

'Nell! Nell! Excuse me, Bert—'

I stayed to hear no more, but turned on my heel and strode away.

No sooner had I reached my lodging, when I was heartily ashamed of myself; and when Tom, my elder brother, and only living relative, rushed in and told me that he had left his wife ill at home, so anxious was he to see me married, the last bit of crossness departed, and a great wave of tenderness swept over my heart for the brown-eyed girl whom I knew was to marry me to-morrow only because she loved me far better than the elegance of her father's home, or the costly trifles he could give her.

Next morning came, the church was packed, and I feeling most uncommonly stiff and awkward in a span new suit and speckless gloves, was waiting in the vestry.

Nellie was to enter on her father's arm, followed by her bridesmaids and groomsmen—six in number—while I was to enter in the nick of time from the vestry, the minister from his study, and meet before the altar.

It was all very pretty; but I almost knew I should make a mess of it; and I did, with a vengeance.

I had requested to be allowed to be alone, so as to keep my part in my mind, and for the same reason I went early to the church, not to be stared at or confused.

Just at that moment Tom came rushing in, followed by the sexton.

'I've got a telegram from Lettie;' said Tom, his voice quivering. 'She is worse, and I must start at once. Just time to catch the train. Good-bye, old boy! God bless you!'

'I'm going, too—just came to wish you joy, Mr. Bert,' said the sexton, who had known me since I was a lad, and who had arranged for a man to perform his duties on this occasion. 'Sorry I can't see you married. My road's the same as your brother's, so I'll go with him.'

And on they both hurried, the door closing with a sharp click behind them.

The time for the arrival of the wedding party drew near; I advanced to the door that opened into the church, designing to open it and peep through.

It resisted my efforts.

I struggled with it sharply.

No use.

The door was locked.

Muttering a curse on the stupidity of the sexton, I strode to the outer door.

In shutting the door it, too, had become locked, and was as fast as fate.

Great drops of perspiration stood on my forehead.

What was to be done?

I asked myself the question, and mopped my face with my immaculate handkerchief, but failed to find the answer.

Then I flew to the inner door and listened.

The organ was playing gayly, and a subdued hush told me that Nellie was entering on her father's arm, and here was I standing, caged like a rat.

Oh, how I tried to open that door!

My gloves split, and the perspiration ran in rivers down my face, and dropped off the end of my nose; but not one inch could I budge it.

I have wondered since how I should have looked if I had succeeded in bursting open the door, and been suddenly projected before the creme de la creme, with limp collar, torn gloves, red face, and distended eyes.

I can smile now, but I assure you I saw no fun in it then.

Utterly hopeless, I returned to the inner door once more.

All was silent.

Should I thunder upon its panels, and proclaim my presenec and demand to be 'let out?'

Nobody likes to look like a fool if he can help it; and I hesitated.

I glanced around.

The windows caught my eye—why had I not thought of them?

I could at least make my escape, and the ceremony might be delayed, and consequently awkward; still, Nell would not be utterly put to shame.

Like the madman I was, I seized the table, dragged it to the window, sprang upon it, and climbed on to the high and narrow window-sill; throwing up the sash, I prepared to leap out; but I had reckoned without my host; the cord that held the weight was broken, consequently the moment my hand left the sash the window descended with startling rapidity, striking me full upon the head, and knocking me off the narrow sill, dashing my head against the sharp corner of the table, and landing me full length on the floor.

I tried to rise; something warm rushed over my face; I put up my hand to clear my eyes—my hand was covered with blood.

I felt giddy and weak; still I staggered to my feet; then a black mist arose around me, and I knew no more.

This was Thursday morning.

On Saturday afternoon, the sexton returning to his duties, found me lying upon the floor half dead, wholly delirious, my face was covered with blood, and a hole in my head large enough to let the life out of any man.

That mine was spared was because I had fallen with the wound down, and the soft pile of the carpet acted like lint to staunch the blood.

As soon as I could control my thoughts I begged to know of Nellie.

Poor little girl! she had been quite overwhelmed.

When I failed to appear, Kate's husband rushed to inquire of the sexton if he had seen me.

He was positive that I had been there, and equally positive that I had left again in company with his brother—said he could not be mistaken—both seemed in a great hurry, and had jumped into a carriage and been driven rapidly away.

Messengers were sent to my lodgings, but without gaining a clue to my whereabouts; so, after a mortifying wait, Nellie had been taken home, and the very morning of the day I was discovered the whole family had left for the Continent.

As soon as I was able to stand I sailed in search of the woman I had so innocently humiliated.

Not knowing her whereabouts, it was two months before I found her.

At last, one evening, wandering on the sea-shore of a quiet little French town, I espied her—and alone.

That she believed me the most blackened villain was plain, for the look she gave me when she recognized my presence was one of unutterable contempt.

Now that I had found her, I was determined she should hear the truth.

'Nellie!' I cried, hurrying to her, and grasping both her little hands, before she had time to escape.

'Well, sir?' she replied, haughtily trying, but trying in vain, to free her hands from my clasp.

'My darling,' I pleaded, 'you will at least hear a man before you condemn him?'

Her pale face flushed angrily.

'What can you say,' she burst out hotly, 'that will make your conduct less dastardly? Have you not made me the object of everyone's ridicule and contemptuous pity? Offering me a public insult no woman could ever forgive! Have you not made me hate everybody, myself most of them all? What more do you wish, Bertram Langley—you villian?'

I winced a little at the word, as I thought of my broken head—though I did not blame her, believing as she did.

'Why are you here?—and why did you run away?' she demanded, with a whole world of scorn on the words 'run away.'

'I did not run away; I was locked up.'

'Locked up! For what? Where?' cried poor Nell, starting back, a look of horror creeping up into the brown eyes.

I verily believe she thought for an instant I had added murder to my other crimes.

'Why, in the vestry,' I explained, a little foolishly. 'Come and sit down, and let me tell you. I am quite ill yet.'

This was a master-stroke.

Nell seated herself without demur; and I, half-sitting, half-lying at her feet, related to her the chapter of my misfortunes.

Great was the family wonder to see us walk in together; but everything was all right as soon as explained, and Mr. and Mrs. Bartley consented that Nell and I might be married in the little quaint church in the place.

And so we were.

I led my bride in myself, and papa and Mamma Bartley followed soberly behind, with Kate and her husband.

A curate with a bad cold officiated, and the time-honored pew-owner shabby and snuffy, was on hand to make everything romantic and proper.

So this is why we were married without brides-maids, and had two wedding days.

Journal of Travel to California in the Early Days.

No. IV.

Monday, April 23. The wind has increased through the night, and the ship rolls heavily. It is nearly clear except a few straggling clouds. We shall probably run clear of this constant roll before many days, all else being quiet on board. Had an observation at 12 o'clock. Distance ran in the last 24 hours 240 miles. Latitude 15' 16 N., longitude 71' 45 west. Course S. S. W. Latter part of the day and night, squally with heavy sea. Wind has hauled one point which brings it nearly over our quarter. We carried away our mizzen-top mast, and mizzen mast head at the cross trees. As they came down our French friend was particularly alarmed, for he was in fear lest the ship was breaking away and his noble self would shortly be consigned to the tender mercies of the Carribbean Sea. All of which his companions did not seek very strongly to allay.

Tuesday, 23rd. The wind which troubled us so strongly last night has lulled and at 7 o'clock the sea has become comparatively smooth. At 11 o'clock held a meeting on the quarter deck and passed resolutions commendatory of the character and conduct of Capt. Wilson, officers and crew of the Steamer. Took an observation at noon. Distance ran in 24 hours, 229 miles. Latitude 11' 21 N., longitude 71' 22 west. Course S. W. 1 o'clock, sea is becoming a little rough, and as the ship is yet making her way through the rough of the sea she rolls very much. We expect to make Chagres to-morrow as we have but 171 miles to run and we are in hopes to run it up by daybreak, to-morrow morning. Passengers still and retired to their berths early to-night. The crew are overhauling the chain cable preparatory for anchoring when we shall get in.

Wednesday 24th. Made the land at 5 o'clock A. M. As the weather was thick could not make out for a certainty what it was and stood up the coast for 25 miles. The coast along this line has so much of a similarity it is often very difficult to ascertain with any degree of certainty the exact point, especially in thick weather. Finding we had passed the port of Chagres, we tacked and ran down until we made the bay or harbor, which we did about 11 o'clock, A. M. As I have said the coast has similarity not often seen. The hills rise at equal distances and are of nearly the same height, and the whole presents so uniform an appearance it very often deceives the most experienced navigator in thick weather. The sea swell at this place is very rough and heavy, and the surf rolls on to the shore much more heavy than I have ever seen, and makes a landing very uncomfortable and even hazardous, attended very often with loss of life. The steamer was obliged to anchor about 3 miles from the shore, and the general conveyance to Chagres is by natives in small boats dug out of a log and paddled to the shore through the surf, which renders the landing of passengers, (especially ladies) very slow and dangerous.

Chagres is a place of no great magnitude. Its buildings or the greater part of them are thatched bamboo huts or shanties erected by the natives, and the huts are in strict obedience to the character of the owners. There is but one trait in their character that is commendable, that is cleanliness, for they are disgusting as they are entirely naked, with not one rag of clothing to cover them. Here is an exception, a hut denominated a Hotel, made of boards, and a small building called a store, both of which would suffer in comparison with many of our buildings for swine at home. The hotel was kept by a man by the name of Miller. The store was occupied by a man who I think belongs to New York, by the name of Taylor. I do not know as I should succeed if I should attempt an illustration of the person who has left civilized society and banished himself from the world for the mere purpose of gain. He is a creature of over 6 feet in height, with a head much longer than is generally allowed to gentlemen in a civilized community, and with his body lengthened out for many a span, (and as an honest hibernian once said that it was not large enough to make a shadow.) The covering of his head, which was once an inhabitant of the upper ten, had quitted its natural home and taken up its residence on his chin, and the contrast between the upper and lower sections of his cranium was particularly striking. I purchased of this man a bottle of extract of ginger, which is very useful to mix with the river water, which all are obliged to drink at this place or going up the river. On the height opening from the bay stands an old Spanish or Mexican Fort once used for its defence but is in a dilapidated state now. Its outside appearance is rather imposing, but presents a much better appearance in the interior. It was once a good structure of the kind and was capable of doing some execution in defence of an enemy, if they were so fortunate as to get through the surf over the bar, which would be very doubtful, indeed. Rupture

Relieved and Cured by DR. J. A. SHERMAN'S Method. Without regard to age or duration of the affliction, the injury trusses inflict, or hindrance from labor, and with security from strangulation—of which, according to statistics, over 30,000 died during the past year. No one is safe who has a rupture and depends upon a truss; both are a physical and mental tax; bring on kidney, bladder and other organic diseases, which affect general health more than age or labor, besides affecting manhood and destroying all incentives to social pleasure. Patients from abroad can receive treatment and leave for home same day. Book, with photographic likeness of bad cases, before and after cure, and indorsements by Physicians, Merchants and others who have been cured, mailed for 10c. Principal office, 251 Broadway, N. Y; days of consultation—Mondays, Tuesdays and Saturdays. Branch office, 43 Milk Street, Boston; Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays.

THE PEABODY HOUSES IN LONDON. [From the London Letter in San Francisco Chronicle.] When Peabody died he left a charity fund of $3,500,000 for the benefit of the deserving poor of London. You may be interested in knowing that that fund is the most useful of any of the many that have been established in England. He first gave £125,000, which he desired the trustees to use in such a manner that it would be reproductive and should yet benefit the poor. The trustees had a hard time to find out how to fulfil the conditions of the gift. He had said, "I don't want any denomination to have it," therefore none of the institutions, under church auspices could be benefited. It would not do to give it in aid of the pauper and public asylums and hospitals for they were already a charge upon the taxpayers and therefore the taxpayer would be the one chiefly benefited in the lightening of his burdens. Neither would it do to give it to the blind or the helpless, for then it could never be reproductive. It was very difficult to fulfill the conditions of the Mortmain law, and these troubles were aggravated by the fact of Mr. Peabody's American birth. This seems like ancient history, I dare say, in the columns of a live newspaper, but there are lots of people who don't know anything about it; and besides, if you would know of the American colony here, you must learn of the existing results of the munificence of its former greatest member. It was at last fixed up, however, and the trustees decided to build tenement-houses on the most approved plans, which they would rent at the minimum figure to the poorer classes of the working people. They did so. It was a great success. The first house accommodated nearly five hundred tenants, and the return for this investment was about 3 3-4 per cent. Then they built more, and now nearly 10,000 people are living in the Peabody houses. They pay for the quarters five shillings and sixpence down to two shillings and ninepence, or $1.32 to 66 cents per week. They have, in the case of the highest price, four rooms, in which are gas, water, range, bath and retiring-room, for none of which they pay anything; and in the lowest price-list two rooms. There are none of them that are not as comfortable as you please. Many of them are better than the middle-class family lives in America. The architectural aspect of the houses is good, too, and there is an interior court, with playground, fountain, shade and so on, with comforts innumerable. There is no doubt of the fact that the people who live in them are very cosy and comfortable, and it seems to me that similarly disposed charitable men in many cities of America could not do better than follow Mr. Peabody's footsteps; and I often wonder why Peabody did not do it at home. He did considerable for Baltimore; established an Institute and library, but, unfortunately, people cannot take the books out of the library, and the purpose of the donor is not realized. Danvers, the place of Peabody's birth, also received much from his largess.

Of seventy-eight towns that voted on the license question on Monday forty-nine voted no and the remainder yes. The total vote was 11,288 yes to 14,793 no. Thus Mendon, 1 yes to 58 no; Upton, 4 to 130; Tewksbury, not one yes and 55 no; Hanson, 6 to 65; Uxbridge, 2 to 130; Grafton, 36 to 245; Wa[illegible]oe, 3 to 202; Wellesley, 4 to 114; Belmont, 18 to 98; Franklin, 2 to 169; Bradford, 8 to 169. Some of the larger towns show strong prohibitory figures. Andover voted against license by 127 to 45; Hyde Park, 518 to 279; Plymouth 274 to 101; Rockport, 349 to 118. The large towns, many of them, stood strongly for license. Waltham 951 to 818; Danvers 421 to 282; Milford 600 to 321; Quincy, thanks to policeman Faxon's efforts, voted 1086 no to 458 yes. Paxton voted unanimously no. North Andover, which had a strong yes majority a year ago, only had four majority for license this time, while Ipswich, which has always been a prohibition town, on Monday decided for license by 302 to 101.

A very powerful locomotive has just been constructed by Mr. J. K. Taylor, master mechanic of the Old Colony Railroad shops, for passenger service on that road, and will run on the train connecting at Fall River with the new steamer Pilgrim. It weighs 85,500 pounds, has cylinder 18 x 24 inches, driving wheels of six feet diameter, boiler of heavy steel plate, and is finished with all the latest modern improvements, including the patent spark-arrester. A trial trip was made on Wednesday last, and the working of the huge machine was very satisfactory.

During last week the New Home Sewing Machine Company of Orange, Mass., forwarded seventeen carloads of its machinery to different points, the largest shipments for the length of time in its history.

A Woman's Experience.

WHAT A LADY OF GREAT PROMINENCE HAS TO SAY ABOUT HER SEX.

(Boston Globe.)

On a recent trip by a representative of this paper to the city of Haverhill, Mass., a most important incident occurred, which cannot fail to be of the greatest interest to all, and especially to our lady readers. The newspaper man met a lady a trifle past middle age, with luxurious white hair that contrasted strikingly with piercing black eyes. She possessed a straight, full habit, womanly, but commanding, combined with manners wholly lady-like, and yet pronounced. Any acute judge of human nature could see at once that he was in the presence of an unusual personage—one destined to accomplish more than most of her sex, and to exert an influence far reaching in its power. This lady was Mrs. M. W. Wingate. Almost from childhood she has taken a special interest in the bodily troubles of her sex and has probably been more successful in relieving suffering, and saving lives than any other woman in America. Indeed, she seems to have been to women what Florence Nightingale and Dorothy Dix were to the suffering soldiers. The instances of women who were in the greatest agony and apparently beyond the reach of human aid, that she has restored to health and happiness, are almost innumerable, and it was only natural that the scribe should become specially interested and wish to converse with her more in detail.

"How long have you been engaged in the practice of medicine, Mrs. Wingate?"

"For more than 25 years."

"A long time, certainly. How did you happen to enter the field at that early day when women in the professions were specially frowned down upon?"

"I think I must have inherited a taste from my father, Professor J. C. Wood, of Harvard college. He was eminent in the profession, a hard worker and equally earnest in his recreations. He hunted considerably and I remember when only nine years old I used to dissect the birds and animals he had killed. I felt infatuated with medical science even then, and the infatuation has continued up to the present time."

"And did you begin your studies so early in life?"

"I can hardly say when I began, for I cannot remember when I did not read medical literature. You would scarcely believe it, but I was a slender girl and did not weigh over 120 pounds, but I used to sit up night after night until 2 o'clock in the morning poring over my studies and never dreaming of the flight of time. It seemed as though calls for my attendance on the sick always came unsolicited. I certainly cannot fix the date when I first began practicing. Of course most of my patients were women, and the natural sympathy I felt for my sex has increased during all these years where I have been brought so closely in contact with them and have learned to anticipate their needs and sympathize with their sufferings. After the opening of the Boston Medical College, I appeared before the faculty; passed examination and received a diploma. I had practiced for years previous to that time but thought it desirable to receive another diploma which I did without any effort."

"Your experience with the many and serious diseases of women, having been so extensive must also be valuable. Can you give me some facts regarding them?"

"I find that woman seems born to suffering, and where she avoids it, it is by reason of some care on her part or owing to some special renewing power. It is true some women go through life without unusual suffering, but they are none the less in danger, for there are critical periods all along their pathway, when the utmost precaution is required. The innumerable complaints called female weaknesses; the irregularities of life and changes of the system all indicate the perils which hang over every woman's career, and which, unless attended to, may result disastrously."

"But is there no way by which these terrible troubles can be avoided?"

"That has been the problem for years. The habits of life and the demands of fashion are clearly at war with the health of women. I have been, perhaps, unusually successful in my treatment of their troubles, but there have been many cases that seemed specially stubborn. I recall one in particular. I had exhausted all the usual expedients and the results were not satisfactory. I became worried over the case and really did not know what to do, but finally thought I would try something out of the usual line. I had heard a certain remedy recommended very highly and so I procured some and made a chemical analysis of it. I found it was perfectly pure, and that the ingredients were unusually valuable. So I began giving it to my patient, changing it, however, into a bottle of my own. To my great joy it seemed to have an almost immediate effect and a complete cure was the result. Since then I have used it constantly in my practice and have cured every form of female weakness, as well as displacements, dropsical tumors, cellu dropsy and all such troubles. I have also used it with the best of results in cases of pregnancy and gestation. Indeed I have found it of untold value and benefit."

"Have you any objection to giving me the name of this remedy of which you speak?"

"None whatever. It is Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure."

"Why, that is a proprietary medicine!"

"Certainly, but what of that? I have but one end in view in the treatment of my patients, namely—their restoration to health. In the accomplishment of this end I prescribe what I believe to be beneficial, no matter what the professional consequences may be."

"I notice in the New York papers that Doctors Hammond, Agnew and other prominent physicians are taking a similar stand Mrs. Wingate."

"Yes, and all independent thinkers in the profession are bound to do so. I am, however, on the best of terms with my professional brethren as you can see." and the lady produced a beautiful gold medal mounted in the form of a badge which had been presented her by the medical society, known as the Ensign of the Humble Family, of which she is a prominent member. After examining it closely, the reporter remarked that the medical profession evidently were proud of what she had done, as she might well be in the possession of such a medal.

"I am proud of that," she replied, "and I was also pleased a short time since to receive an offer at a large salary to take a professorship in the new medical college at Walla Walla, on the Pacific coast. I do not know how they heard of me out there, but I was obliged to decline their offer."

"And so, in your experience with the diseases of women, you have found success, and that Warner's Safe Cure has been a most efficient remedy."

"Yes, I have had unusual success and the remedy of which you speak has been proven of great benefit. There are, however, some base imitations of it to be found in the market; these are bad and should be avoided, but the genuine remedy is one of the very best."

"And has not the practice of your profession injured your health?"

"No, I am better now than ever before in my life. I froze my limbs last Winter, while riding one cold night to see a patient, and was obliged to remain indoors for over two months. Otherwise I am healthy, as you can see by looking at me."

"And may I publish this interview, Mrs. Wingate?"

"Yes. If what I have told you should be the means of assisting any women, who may be suffering, I shall be perfectly willing to have it published."

THE DEAF LANDLORD.—"Poker Bill" tells of a boarding-house keeper who is afflicted with a very convenient degree of deafness. He hears only when it is for his own interest to do so, and is apt to misunderstand to his own interest. Bill gives the following instance of his perversity:

"When I went to breakfast yesterday morning I went up to the counter and asked my landlord if anybody had called to ask for me.

"Says the landlord, 'It will be just thirty-five dollars at the end of this week.'

"Said I, 'Has there been a man here to see me this morning—a one-eyed man?"

"'Glad you want to pay it now; I need money very badly,' said the landlord.

"Then I yelled: 'Has anybody asked for me this morning?'

"'No, I don't want to sue you, but I shall expect the money next Monday, sure,' says my landlord.

"'All right, I'll pay you,' yelled I.

"'You needn't yell in that way. I'm a little deaf, I know, but I can still hear it thunder,' says my landlord.

"Then in comes in another boarder, and says to the landlord, 'Good-morning.'

"'I'll see you in a minute,' says the landlord. 'I believe it's only about fifteen dollars.'

"So it goes on right along. I'm going to pay up next Monday," says Bill, "and you bet I'll never stop with another deaf landlord—not if I know it."

It is also announced that the Salem Oratorio Society have renewed negotiations for joint concerts by the two associations; when will this be decided, one way or the other? The local papers have already announced repeatedly, both that there will and that there won't be such an arrangement.—Vox Populi, Lowell.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE. — Thirty-one towns in this State had an article in the warrant for the next town meeting, "to see whether the town, by petition or otherwise, will ask the Legislature for a law to give municipal suffrage to women." Provincetown and Nantucket have acted on the article and voted to so petition.

"Horse-car conductors," says a spiteful writer, "should always be chosen with a view to personal courage, because 'None but the brave deserve the fair.'" It is pre-eminently true that "None but meritorious preparations deserve success." Everybody knows the nature and effects of Catarrh. It is one of the most loathsome maladies, and has been pronounced incurable. Ely's Cream Balm may be described as a gigantic tidal wave which has submerged that theory. This Balm is a pleasant, popular, perfect preparation, and a certain cure for Catarrh. It is not a liquid or snuff, and is easily applied. "I had Catarrh for fifteen years," said C, Z. Warren, Rutland, Vt., "with distressing pains over my eyes, gradually the disease worked down upon my lungs. Ely's Cream Balm cured me." All who use it speak in the same grateful strain.

Mr. Horatio N. McCully reached home from Florida last Monday morning. The change incident to the journey from the land of flowers to the snow of New England was not the most agreeable part of his experience. Mr. McCully was much pleased with the country and has purchased a small orange grove containing some 225 trees about three years old, at Orange Park, a growing place some fifteen miles from Jacksonville. He met our townsman, Mr. C. Warren Osborn at Jacksonville last Wednesday, and reports him as enjoying himself.

The Selectmen have received the resignations of Chief of Police Peasley and Officer Parker, after an investigation the particulars of which are not made public, to take effect to-day. There seems to be good grounds for the supposition that the officers had been at times indiscreet, but that it should cause the resignation especially of Chief Peasley would hardly be expected. While in the discharge of his duty he has always had the respect of the whole community. Capt. Thomas N. Barnaby of the night watch has been appointed temporary chief.

The trustees of the Peabody Institute held a meeting Monday evening. A. A. Abbott was chosen President, A. B. Merrill Secretary, and Franklin Osborn Jr., Treasurer. The following are the committees: Finance, Dr. C. C. Pike, Alex. B. Merrill, Kendall Osborn, Geo. J. Winchester, Francis H. Appleton. Building, J. E. T. Bartlett, Nathan Bushby, Thomas Carroll. Lyceum and Library, Thos. M. Stimpson, Geo. M. Foster, Frank C. Merrill, Lyman P. Osborne, Thos. Carroll, F. H. Appleton, H. V. Buxton, Geo. F. Osgood, Theo. M. Osborne, O. B. Chadwick, Francis Nugent, C. C. Pike.

We are pleased to note the favor with which the new Essex Co. Atlas is meeting, and that already about sufficient encouragement has been given to guarantee its successful conception. Also the pains taken in perfecting the survey. This work is worthy the attention of our citizens, and if you have the time when the agent calls look it over and give him your order.

Easter Services.

At the South Congregational Church, the pastor Rev. Mr. Sperry will officiate at 10.15 A. M., and a sermon appropriate to Easter will be preached. In the evening it is expected that a song and scripture service will be held in the vestry, at which the singing will be by a chorus choir.

At the Unitarian Church, Rev. J. W. Hudson will preach at 2.15 P. M., and the following selections of music will be given:

Easter Anthem,	Samuel Webbe
Chant,	Flint
Hymn,	Lift your glad voices

The choir under the direction of Mr Clark consists of Miss Nellie Hutchinson, Soprano.

Miss Anna Hubon, Contralto.
Mr. William P. Clark, Tenor.
Mr. Frank W. Taggard, Bass.
Miss Nellie Bartlett, Organist.

In the evening there will be an Easter concert, under the direction and by the classes of Geo. Randall and Miss Vienna Batchelder.

At the Methodist Church Rev. Dr. Steele will preach at 2.15 P. M.

At the Baptist Church it is expected that Mr. F. J. Jones, of Newton Theological Seminary, will preach.

At South Peabody Rev. Mr. Colwell, the pastor, will preach in the afternoon.

Sunday, March 25th, will be a double holyday at St. John's Church, the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin and Easter Sunday. This event will not occur for 11 years, until 1894. There will be three Masses—a Low Mass at 7 o'clock, a Children's Mass at 8.30, and a High Mass at 10 o'clock. After the Gospel Rev. M. J. Masterson will preach a sermon on our Saviour's Glorious Resurrection. At the 10 o'clock Mass the following programme of music has been arranged for the choir of thirty voices, under the direction of Chas. A. Clark:

Organ Fantasie,	Haendel
Motett, Vidi Agnam,	Wilcox—Southard
Kyrie, Gloria, Credo, Sanctus, Agnus Dei, Dona Nobis,	Imperil Mass No. 3. Haydn

The choir under the direction of Dr. J. F. Tuckerman, consists of Miss F. L. Pitman, Soprano.

Mrs. Frank C. Ferguson, Contralto.
Dr. J. F. Tuckerman, Tenor
Mr. C. E. Fabens, Bass,
A. J. Walker, Organist.

After weeks of a severe conflict with the disease which has stricken his family, Mr. Eben A. Hooper finally succumbed last Saturday morning. It had been hoped by his attendant physicians that he would recover his strong constitution and previous vigorous health being in his favor. But it was not to be, and his widow and family, doubly stricken by the loss of a kind father and loving husband as well as other members of the family, have the sympathy of our entire community. The remaining children are in a critical condition. Mr. Hooper's age was 41 years. His funeral was attended Sunday, Hose 3 attending in a body. He was a member of the N. E. Mutual Benefit Association.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

Last Friday evening one of the most successful series of revival meetings ever held here closed at the Congregational church, and many were the words of regret expressed that they should have been closed when it would seem that the interest was on the increase and the good work apparently just begun. The body of the house was filled and after singing by the congregation, Rev. Mr. Sayford the evangelist who has conducted the meetings, read the xxvi. chapter of Acts. He was followed by Dr. Steele in prayer, and singing, when he again addressed the audience who gave the closest attention throughout. He did not prefix his remarks with a text; but said "I can look forward to the time when we shall meet and take up these songs and sing them throughout eternity, and it is with feelings of sadness, as I know there are some who laugh now, who will not in the day of judgment; in that day when the pleasures of this world will not save you. I have three things I wish to impress on your memory; first, there is a vast difference between religion in the head, and the Lord Jesus Christ in the heart. People go to church because it is the popular thing to-day; that does not give life hereafter; there is no way except by Jesus Christ; there are plenty of people who by their force of will make up their minds to lead a better life, but that is only a reform. Some are sinners saved, and some unsaved sinners, but we are all sinners; second, the law does not take away our sin neither does the keeping of the law make us Christians; the Lord alone gives forgiveness, by the grace of God through his son Jesus Christ, and you must receive this gift before you can have eternal life; profession does not always denote possession; we must be born of God before we are born for God; 'except ye be born again ye cannot see God;' it does not make any difference what church you belong to, but is your name on the Lamb's Book of Life; these bodies are not our own, we who are Christians, but a house for the soul, and must be preserved to glorify God; I shall not tell you what to do to-day or not to do; but remember we live in borrowed houses, and we have no right to defile them with the use of tobacco or liquors; we must take care of them for His work. Ingersoll may blaspheme as he will, and he will as long as people will pay him $300 a night to do so, but it does not effect this work (placing his hand on the bible) He who redeemed us is able to keep us. Thirdly, there is the joy of this world, and the joy of the Lord, the joy of the world fades at the end of the journey of life while the joy of the Lord grows brighter day by day, and, my friends, you have got to get the divine nature before you can live in that atmosphere and that joy. Is it worth living for? You who are going down the western side of the hill, will you come to-night? and young men will you come? when the church gets an old man it gets a unit, and when it gets a young man it gets a multiplication. In closing, what I may have said here may have been awkwardly put but it has been earnestly and faithfully put. If this is God's word what is your fate if you reject it?" After the close of the services in the church, a large company gathered in the vestry and a short meeting of praise, prayer and testimonials followed. There were seventy-six testimonials given in twelve minutes, which showed the great interest in the services. During these meetings some fifty converts have been made.

Mr. James O. Safford, of Salem, well known to our leather dealers, died at his home in Salem Sunday morning, of hemorrhage of the lungs. Mr. Safford was the senior member of the well known hide and leather house of James O. Safford & Co., of Boston, doing a large Commission business for the sale of hides and leather, numbering among its customers consignors from all parts of the United States. There is probably not a leather dealer or manufacturer in our town who has not had dealings more or less, with the firm. He had been confined to his house some months, so that his death was not entirely unexpected. Mr. Safford was a director in the North National Bank in Boston, and for a number of years also in the Naumkeag Steam Cotton Company of Salem. He was a man of strict integrity, and, though not aspiring to public office, was elected to the Salem city council in 1865, 1866, 1867 and 1868. He leaves a widow and two sons, one of whom was his associate in business.

Mrs. Barrows, wife of Rev. Dr. Barrows, formerly pastor of the Baptist Church in this town, died in Newport last Thursday. His friends in this town will sympathize with him in this great sorrow.

WEST PEABODY.—On Friday night, Mar. 16, after the usual singing and reading of the minutes of last meeting, the President of the club, Mr. Taylor, introduced the speaker of the evening, Hon. N. A. Horton, editor of the Salem Gazette, who after a few preliminary remarks, said: "My subject for this evening is one that is engaging the attention of a great many of the voters of this state, and has been discussed for some years past, both by the press, on the platform, and also in the legislature. It is that of Taxation." The speaker before he entered upon his subject, paid a fitting tribute to the people of West Peabody, as being quite an intelligent and orderly body, and mentioned the fact that his father had many years ago worked in the factory there, and that he still felt a deep interest in the town; he also spoke of the days of Salem witchcraft and mentioned the case of Giles Corey. He greatly admired the Farmers' Club, and was glad to see them meet together for social enjoyment and mutual education. Did the people in general come together for such purposes oftener, more knowledge on great questions of state and political economy would be better understood, especially that of Taxation. Should a mortgage be taxed in addition to the tax on the value of the house? The speaker argued at great length on this point, giving his views, and that he believed that it should. Was in favor of a poll tax as that was the part a poor man paid for the support of the state, and the only mite he contributed for all the benefits that he enjoyed. Under the law of 1871 the lender was exempt from taxation and the borrower had to pay; thought that the tendency of the laws was in favor of exempting the wealthy and the bondholders from paying taxes, and forcing it upon real estate; that a man who pays taxes on $20,000 of real estate, has some $30,000 invested in bonds that he does not let the assessor know about; did not believe that the bondholder should be exempt from taxes on his bonds, and that since the rate of interest was lower on government bonds, it had also reduced the rate in all other directions, especially on mortgages. In regard to double taxation Mr. Horton said the assessor comes to the tanner in June and assesses him for $10,000 on hides in vats. In August he goes to a currier who has the same hides and assesses him on the same, $19,000. In October he goes to the Boot and Shoe Manufacturer and assesses him $20,000 on the same hides which have now become leather; thus he now pays taxes on the $10,000 of the tanner and $10,000 of the currier. If that is not double taxation with a vengeance, what is it? He also said that the state tax of the town of Peabody was now $7,300 and it would be only half of that had the law of 1881 not been repealed. After some further points of great importance bearing on this question the speaker closed. There was singing by the chorus club, after which Mr. Needham took the floor and read the report of the sinking fund of the Town of Peabody, and wondered why they paid $100 for the trouble of keeping some old papers of the High service. Mr. Horton rose and explained what a sinking fund was and how created. Mr. Ingraham took exceptions to the poll tax and thought it was unjust. Mr. King agreed with the speaker of the evening in all that he said and especially with regard to the poll tax, in that all could enjoy this fine school house that was raised from that source. He also moved that Mr. Horton be elected an honorary member of the Farmers' Club, when by vote Mr. Horton was elected unanimously. Mr. Spaulding moved that should the entertainment be held on Wednesday evening, that the discussion be continued on next Friday evening, and should the entertainment be postponed till Friday, then the Friday following, which was carried. After singing by the chorus club the meeting adjourned.

Great interest centered in the drawing of the prizes at the Grand Army Fair at Lynn last Wednesday evening, as a large number of tickets were held in this town. The first prize of $1000 was drawn by a ticket held by Mrs. Emma Gowen of Lynn and caused a little difficulty. The lady had borrowed this ticket and another from two boarders at her house named Dupar and Wm. Lewis, and as each had forgotten his number and as the lady could not tell of whom she borrowed the ticket the affair was settled by the two gentlemen pocketing $500 each. Two of the prizes came to Peabody. The platform rocker to Levi Preston and the Davis Sewing Machine to Frank P. Farnsworth.

This week, being Holy Week, is one of great solemnity in the service of the Catholic Church. Palm Sunday was observed last Sunday. High Mass was celebrated at 10 o'clock by Rev. V. F. Borgialli, O. S. F. Before Mass the blessing of the palm took place, after which it was distributed to the people. In the Mass was read the passion of our blessed Redeemer from the Gospel of St. Matthew. Palm Sunday is commemorative of our Lord's triumphant entry into Jerusalem, and is so called from the palm branches strewed under his feet by the Hebrew children crying Hosanna to the Son of David! To-morrow will be Maundy Thursday. It gets its name from Mandatum, the first word of the anthem sung in the Church on this day. It is in commemoration of our Lord's last supper, when he instituted the blessed sacrament of His precious body and blood. There will be a Solemn High Mass at 8 1-2 o'clock during which two Hosts will be consecrated, one of which will be left for public adoration the remainder of the day. After Mass there will be a procession of the Blessed Sacrament similar to that during the forty hours. Good Friday, commemorative of our Saviour's death on the cross, the passion from St. John will be read. The Sacred Host will remain exposed during the office. A statue of the dead Christ will be placed in a canopy draped in mourning inside the chancel, unto which as the image of Him who suffered so much for mankind, the faithful will be expected to pay their justly merited respect by reverently kissing the representation of the five sacred wounds. In the evening there will be the way of the cross and a sermon on the Passion by Rev. Daniel B. D. Kennedy, pastor of the Annunciation Church, Danvers. Holy Saturday, the last day of Lent, a Solemn High Mass at 8 o'clock. The Paschal Candle will be blessed, and will remain lighted up at the Gospel until Ascension Day. The baptismal water, etc., will be blessed. After Mass the Easter water will be distributed to the people.

Though a man's clothes fit him and he can find no fault with his tailor; though his wife keeps his coffee hot, his butter cold and his shirt buttons in place; though his children obey his injunctions and make him proud by their behavior and industry; though his groceryman serves him well and charges him reasonable; though his butcher cuts him just two pounds of steak when he calls for that amount, and deftly eliminates the bone before weighing the meat; though his gas-bill is smaller than he anticipated and his coal-cellar empties slowly; though the man who owes him comes in with a bow, liquidates and invites him out to have a cigar; though circumstances meet by appointment for his convenience and fortune smiles upon him at every step, man will find fault with the weather. And who will say the weather does not deserve it? Snow, rain, gales, calms, follow each other almost as rapidly as the days, and the mercury in the thermometer works like an old-fashioned churn-dasher. Where is the meteorological, geographical, atmospherical idiot who originally labelled this the "temperate zone?" He deserves a monument. But it would tax the originality and imagination of all the weather prophets now laboring for fame to devise one that would do him justice.

Mr. Frank P. Tucker went to Boston last Thursday in company with Miss Minnie Gardner of Salem, a young lady to whom he is to be married, to select their furniture. He had some three hundred and forty dollars in his possession and after looking at his furniture he started for the cars when he discovered that he had lost his pocket-book containing the money. After making a thorough search he reported his loss to the police who promised to do all they could for him. Mr. Tucker has many friends in this town who are willing to help him. A party of Lynn friends have presented him with a chamber set and 16 yds. of carpet, and Mr. John Shaw has circulated a petition and $296 has already been contributed.

Company L. of the 8th Regiment, of which Mr. Tucker was a member, has raised $40 for him thus far and the paper is still being circulated.

While driving on Columbus avenue on Wednesday afternoon, Mr. Edgar W. Upton, of Peabody, was suddenly surprised by his horses sinking through the soil and fairly sitting down in a huge hole. The matter was reported to the Water Board and yesterday Superintendent Grush found that the hole was made by the sinking in of a service trench in front of Mr. Charles N. Symonds' house. The trench was filled nearly two years ago, and why it should cave in at this time is a mystery. No leak was found.—Gazette.

The well known "Muligan" Sweeney of this town while walking on the railroad track near Grove street, last Wednesday, made a misstep and fell, striking his left temple against one of the iron rails cutting a bad gash. He was escorted to his home and medical aid summoned,—the timely arrival of which prevented him from bleeding to death.

A Perfect Combination with two Salient Advantages—Why it Concerns You.

"There is no mistake about it," remarked Dr. M. F. Flowers, of Gallatin, Missouri, "BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS are one of the nearest combinations ever produced. They have two kinds of advantages over all others, which we may call the minor and the major.—First, they are clean and pleasant to use, never soiling the hands nor the linen of the wearer.—Second, they act quickly and powerfully. I have tried the Capcine Plaster on myself for pneumonia, and on my patients for various diseases, such as Neuralgia, Muscular Rheumatism, Lumbago, Kidney Trouble, etc., and in all cases relief has followed in from three to forty-eight hours.

Dr. Flower merely voices the written or oral opinion of thousands in his profession. BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS are the perfect external application. The genuine have the word CAPCINE cut in the centre. Price 25 c.

THE NEW TAX LAW.—It will be handy to know just what taxes are to be collected by the commissioner of internal revenue, after the new law goes into operation. Distilled spirits will pay ninety cents per gallon; wines in imitation of champagne, but not from domestic grapes, ten cents per pint; stamps for distilled spirits for export, ten cents; stamps for distilling warehouse, for rectified spirits, for wholesale liquor dealers, for special bonded ware houses, for re-warehousing, for tobacco for export, for imported spirits, ten cents each; fermented liquors, beer, etc., one dollar per barrel; cigars, per thousand, three dollars; cigarettes, per thousand, fifty cents; tobacco, chewing and smoking, eight cents per pound: snuff, per pound, eight cents; dealers in manufactured tobacco, per annum, five dollars; dealers in leaf, per annum, twelve dollars; manufacturers of tobacco, per annum, twenty-four dollars, manufacturers of cigars, per annum, six dollars; manufacturers of stills, per annum, fifty dollars, and for each still manufactured, twenty dollars; brewers, five dollars, barrels, per year per annum, fifty dollars; peddlers of tobacco, first class, thirty dollars; second class, fifteen dollars, third class, seven dollars and twenty cents, fourth class, three dollars and sixty cents; wholesale dealers in malt liquor, per annum, twenty-five dollars; rectifiers of five hundred barrels, per annum, one hundred dollars; retail dealers in leaf tobacco, per annum, two hundred and fifty dollars, and for annual sales over one thousand dollars, thirty cents on each dollar. Circulation of banks, per month one-twelfth of one per cent.; circulation of exceeding ninety per cent. of capital, one-sixth of one per cent. additional; on circulating mediums of banks, cities, or persons, ten per cent. The arrangement for rebates will not be perfected for sometime. Banks are questioning whether the tax on deposits now due must be paid, and the rebate clause of the law is not understood at all. Confusion and countless appeals are reckoned on as the order of the day in connection with the new law, for some time to come.

A minister who was inclined to be absent-minded, while walking one day encountered a young lady whose face somehow seemed to be familiar to him. Taking her to be one of his parishoner's daughters, and not wishing to pass her without notice, he stepped forward, and, cordially shaking her hand, entered into conversation, expecting that her name would immediately come to his recollection. After comparing notes about the weather, however, and other topics, he at length had to confess, "Well, I know your face quite well, but I cannot recall where I have seen you before." "Oh, please, sir, I'm your new table-maid!" was the unwelcome reply.

The wind was damp with coming wet
When James and blue-eyed Lizzie met;
He held a gingham o'er his head,
And to the maiden thus he said:
O! lovely maid, my heart's afire
With love's unquenchable desire."
The maid in accents sweet replied:
"Jim, hold the umbrella more my side:
My bran-new bonnet's getting wet,—
I'll marry yer, yer needn't fret."

It's rather embarrassing for a shopkeeper to be obliged to bluff a tax assessor on the valuation of his stock, and on being burned out that night, have to face the same man as chairman of an underwriters' committee on valuation.

Since the transfer steamer Maryland returned to the New York & New England, Philadelphia & Southern line, business has been very good; indeed, it seemed as if travel had been waiting for the resumption of this popular line.

"The Southern Pacific shall never see a cent of my money after this."

"Going to foot it up and down from now on, eh?" sneered the conductor.

"Oh, no," replied the lawyer quietly; "instead of buying my ticket at the office, I shall pay my fare to you."

"I don't want no rubbish, no fine sentiments, if you please," said the widow who was asked what kind of an epitaph she desired for her late husband's tombstone. "Let it be short and simple, something like this: William Johnson, aged 75 years. The good die young."—Brooklyn Eagle.

The subject of divorce is to be treated in the April number of the North American Review by Judge Jameson, the well-known divorce judge of Chicago, and the Rev. Dr. Theodore D. Woolsey, the life-long opponent of divorce.

A cruel fellow tied two cats together by their tails, and threw them into a church vestry, and the neighbors all looked at their calendars to see if it was rehearsal night for the choir.

TO PLEASE HER HUSDAND

Were the words of a Good Lady, Mrs. Hawkins, who has long suffered from the pain common to Chronic Rheumatism. A Woman's Patience and Fortitude Well Shown.

Your reporter found Mrs. Hawkins at 14 Exchange St., New Haven, Conn. "About four years ago," she said, "I was then a resident of Brooklyn, N. Y. I went over one morning to the Jersey City depot to see some friends off who were starting for the west.—There was a strong draft of air in the depot, and in standing by the train talking to my friends I caught a severe cold. I had no more than reached my home again when I was taken with a sudden chill and then fever set in. The outcome of all was that rheumatism settled all over me. I was entirely helpless. From this I have never recovered.—You see my hands what a state they are in. Those are all chalky swellings and my limbs are very bad. While I remained in Brooklyn I tried all sorts of remedies, but I could never gain any relief. My physician said it was no use. I grew very thin and lost all strength. Finally, after coming here, to gratify my husband, I began to take Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY, and my general health has been better than ever before I am stronger, have an excellent appetite, which I did not have for a long time. It has helped my rheumatism, and with a thorough trial I am in hopes of recovering completely."

Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY has been successfully used by thousands. It will build up a system that has been run down by overwork. It is the thing for the student and literary man to have at hand, and should be in the home of every mechanic. FAVORITE REMEDY is economical, safe and pleasant. Buy it and try it.

KEEP YOUR SCALP CLEAN.

The best thing out for removing Dandruff is

HEYLINGBERG'S
EUREKA DANDRUFF REMOVER.

It has been thoroughly tested by hundreds of gentlemen, Ladies, and Children, and we have plenty of testimonials of its good results. It is cooling, removes Dandruff, invigorates the roots of the hair, and will quickly produce a strong and beautiful growth in all cases where the roots of the hair are not fully dead, and will stop this unpleasant itching; in fact it is the best hair dressing in use. It is not greasy or sticky, and is warranted free of all oils, and poisins, and will prove the cleanest, safest and most economical Hair Dressing to be found.

Peabody, Mass., Nov. 18, 1881.

Mr. J. J. Heylingberg. Dear Sir:—Both myself and wife have used your Eureka Dandruff Remover for some time, with the most satisfactory results, and recommend it as being indispensable for the toilet. Yours truly,

FRANK A. BRAGDON.

Many more testimonials furnished if desired.

Persons suffering from diseases of the scalp will be attended at the house when desired.

ONE FOOL AMONG MANY.

WRECKED BY HIS UNTEMPERED AMBITION.—A LIGHTHOUSE ON THE SHOALS.

"I ought to have stopped five years before I did; but I thought it wouldn't amount to anything, so I kept on. I was a fool, of course—but who isn't, when ambition and the chance of making money spurs him on? I only hope I shall get well enough to digest another square meal sometime without a rebellion in my stomach."

The speaker was one of the best known civil engineers and mining experts in this country; hardy by nature as a buffalo, but broken down by hard study and the merciless lashing administered to his mind and body by his own hand during the earlier part of his career. At fifty he is prematurely gray, bent in form and dispirited. Dyspepsia did it—Dyspepsia, the self-inflicted curse of the American in every department of toil.

"I am thirty five years old," writes Mr. Charles H. Watts, of West Somers, Putnam County, N. Y., "and had suffered from dyspepsia for fifteen years. Tried everything.—At last gave PARKER'S GINGER TONIC a chance to show what it could do for me. It proved its ability by curing me. I recommend it to all who are suffering from this terrible desease." Mr. G. R. Cole, druggist, of Carmel, N. Y., certifies to the truth of Mr. Watts' statement.

Gloom, despondency, hopelessness, disgust with all labor, sleeplessness, horrid dreams to render bed-time like the hour of execution to a criminal—these are some of Dyspepsia's foot prints. The Dyspeptic knows what Coleridge meant when he said: "Night is my hell." PARLER'S GINGER TONIC cures Dyspepsia, purifies the Blood, disperses Rheumatism and all chronic ailments. Prices, 50 cents and $1 a bottle. HISCOX & Co., New York.

INGERSOLL AND COOK.—A little while ago Col. Bob. Ingersoll and the Rev. Flavius Josephus Cook, found themselves in a great city where the conflict of infidelity, under its various disguises against Christianity, has always been particularly active, not to say violent, to wit, Boston. The idea occurred to Ingersoll that the occasion was auspicious for a high joint debate, and to this end he dispatched his agent, Gen. Barton, to Cook with a challenge and power to arrange the details. Mr. Cook acquiesced, but, on his part, also referred the details to his business manager. Then came a hitch. "What about the gate money?" asked Cook's man. "What do you mean?" replied Barton, "this is not a cattle-show or a horse-race. Mr. Ingersoll don't want to make any money out of it. He can do that at other places and times. This is to be a public discussion for public enlightenment." "That is all very well," was the rejoinder, "but Mr. Cook's time is worth money—$200 a night, at least." "And Col. Ingersoll's is worth more, but he waives that for this occasion." Mr. Cook's agent was firm, however, and so it was reported to Col. Ingersoll, who thereupon agreed to pay his antagonist $200 a night "just to get a chance at him." But there was another hitch. On behalf of Mr. Cook the shrewd Boston agent demanded an allowance for expenses also. "The ——hog," said Col. Ingersoll, "he shan't have a cent," and so the match was declared "off."—Philadelphia Press.

LAWYERS MAKE A POINT OF cross-questioning witnesses in a merciless manner. Sometimes, however, the former get the worst of it.

"William Look, who made you?" demanded a learned counselor.

William, who was considered a fool, screwed up his face, and looking thoughtful and somewhat bewildered, replied,

"Moses, I s'pose."

"That will do," said the counselor, addressing the Court. "The witness says he supposes Moses made him; that is an intelligent answer—more than I thought him capable of giving, for it shows that he has some faint idea of the Scripture. I submit that is not sufficient to entitle him to be sworn as a witness capable of giving evidence."

"Mister Judge," said the fool, "may I ax the lawyer a question?"

"Certainly," said the judge.

"Well, then, Mister Lawyer, who dy'e s'pose made you?"

"Aaron, I s'pose," said the lawyer, imitating the witness.

After the mirth had somewhat subsided, the witness drawled out:

"Wa'al, neow, we do read in the Book that Aaron once made a calf, but who'd a thought the critter'd got in here?"

A suit has just been decided in a Nebraska city that should be of interest to the young people. A livery man was sued to recover damages by a young couple who hired a horse and buggy from his stable, and the horse ran away, throwing both of them out. The court decided, after learning that the horse became frightened on account of a struggle between the couple for a kiss, that the horse was not to blame. This should be a warning to girls out riding with their best man, not to struggle or kick, but to submit tamely, as no damages can be collected if the horse becomes frightened and runs away, on account of a racket in the buggy. There is no question about how this couple will act when they go out for a ride again.

Advertising agents who want the best space in country papers at less than one fourth price, are again on the war-path. That any paper caring anything for its columns or the favors of its local patronage should entertain such proposals for a moment is beyond our comprehension. Here is a sample of one of the many ridiculous ones we are receiving, and which are thrown in our waste basket:

Will you insert three unobjectionable notices, averaging 40 lines by count, minion copy, of usual newspaper width, leaded, in your reading-matter type, among or immediately following reading matter—the notices to be inserted one at a time, and to alternate with each other, weekly, three months; also a leaded and displayed advertisement, to occupy 9 inches space, next to or immediately following reading, weekly, three months, for $12, payable in cash by check on receipt of bill, when the work is done, less usual agents' commission. Your paper to be mailed to my address regularly.

For the sake of doing something unusual and being talked about, there are men who would attempt to get up a subscription for the relief of those who had lame thumbs caused by the labor of cutting coupons from their own government bonds.—P. O. Picayune.

For Dyspepsia, Costiveness, Sick Headache, Chronic Diarrhœa, Jaundice, Impurity of the Blood, Fever and Ague, Malaria, and all Diseases caused by Derangement of Liver, Bowels and Kidneys.

SYMPTOMS OF A DISEASED LIVER.

Bad Breath; Pain in the Side, sometimes the pain is felt under the Shoulder-blade, mistaken for Rheumatism; general loss of appetite; Bowels generally costive, sometimes alternating with lax; the head is troubled with pain, is dull and heavy, with considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of leaving undone something which ought to have been done; a slight, dry cough and flushed face is sometimes an attendant, often mistaken for consumption; the patient complains of weariness and debility; nervous, easily startled; feet cold or burning, sometimes a prickly sensation of the skin exists; spirits are low and despondent, and, although satisfied that exercise would be beneficial, yet one can hardly summon up fortitude to try it—in fact, distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred when but few of them existed, yet examination after death has shown the Liver to have been extensively deranged.

It should be used by all persons, old and young, whenever any of the above symptoms appear.

Persons Traveling or Living in Unhealthy Localities, by taking a dose occasionally to keep the Liver in healthy action, will avoid all Malaria, Bilious attacks, Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Depression of Spirits, etc. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage.

If You have eaten anything hard of digestion, or feel heavy after meals, or sleepless at night, take a dose and you will be relieved.

Time and Doctors' Bills will be saved by always keeping the Regulator in the House!

For, whatever the ailment may be, a thoroughly safe purgative, alterative and tonic can never be out of place. The remedy is harmless and does not interfere with business or pleasure.

IT IS PURELY VEGETABLE,

And has all the power and efficacy of Calomel or Quinine, without any of the injurious after effects.

A Governor's Testimony.

Simmons Liver Regulator has been in use in my family for some time, and I am satisfied it is a valuable addition to the medical science.

J. GILL SHORTER, Governor of Ala.

Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, of Ga., says: Have derived some benefit from the use of Simmons Liver Regulator, and wish to give it a further trial.

"The only Thing that never fails to Relieve."—I have used many remedies for Dyspepsia, Liver Affection and Debility, but never have found anything to benefit me to the extent Simmons Liver Regulator has. I sent from Minnesota to Georgia for it, and would send further for such a medicine, and would advise all who are similarly affected to give it a trial as it seems the only thing that never fails to relieve.

P. M. JANNEY, Minneapolis, Minn.

Dr. T. W. Mason says: From actual experience in the use of Simmons Liver Regulator in my practice I have been and am satisfied to use and prescribe it as a purgative medicine.

SHAKER LINIMENT.

Shaker Liniment

CURES

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Inflammations, Lame Back, Enlarged Glands, Toothache, Croup, Sprains, Chronic Diseases of the Joints and Muscles, Bruises, Gout, Quinsy, Sore Throat, Swellings. Frosted Feet, Chilblains, and all Diseases of an Inflammatory Nature.

Recommended by Physicians.

Dr. W. C. Sylvester says: "I have examined the formula of the Shaker Liniment, and I use it in my family and recommend it to all sufferers from Neuralgia and Rheumatism. It is better than any other liniment."

A. Hanson, Boston Wire Works, 75 to 81 Cornhill, says: "My wife was cured of Neuralgia.—Four applications cured me of Rheumatism, and Mr. Lord, my neighbor, who has been on crutches fifteen years, obtained relief from less than one bottle of the Shaker Liniment."

Chas. Prescott, Merchant, Randolph, says: "Send me three dozen Shaker Liniment. My customers have confidence in it, and I can consistently recommend it."

Dr. U. K. Mayo, 378 Tremont street, says: "It is the most effective remedy that ever came to my notice, and I cheerfully recommend it."

An Old Nurse says: "If the directions are followed, not one case of croup in a thousand will prove fatal."

J. F. Sawtell, 124 Cambridge street, was cured of Rheumatism, and says: "The Shaker Liniment cured me, and I would advise Rheumatics to use it."

The Boston Traveller says: "Such cures (Mr. Sawtell's) place The Shaker Liniment at the head of all Rheumatic remedies."

Mrs. C. A. Sylvester of the Sawin Academy Sherborn, who was cured of Neuralgia of the heart, says: "Its effects are almost magical. I will cheerfully recommend it to my friends."

E. N. Cummings, the well known Sunday-school worker, formerly of Woburn, now of the firm of Welsh & Cummings', Lynn, says: "The Shaker Liniment cured my wife of an Enlarged Joint, and myself of Acute Inflammation."

C. H. Lewis, Framingham, says: "It gave me quick relief for Rheumatism, and it is the best liniment that I ever used."

Hon. A. Maynard, the extensive manufacturer and founder of the town of Maynard, Mass., who was cured of Neuralgia, says: "By the use of the Shaker Liniment I obtained almost immediate relief and unhesitatingly recommend it to my friends."

L. H. Allen, Station Agent at Rockbottom, says: "I received decided benefit from the Shaker Liniment for Rheumatism, and I have not heard of a case of Neuralgia or Rheumatism that it has not benefitted."

L. J. Jefts, the well known manufacturer of Hudson and Boston, says: "I have seen such proofs of the efficacy of the Shaker Liniment for Neuralgia that I heartily recommend it"

J. E. Braorton, Manager of the "Golden Rule," says: "The Shaker Liniment gave me immediate relief. It is a wonderful remedy."

HEAD OF CENTRAL.

the recommendations of the committee for the extension of the works, which would be an addition of only $2,900 to to the report of the finance committee. Mr. Farley said now we had something tangible to work on. He called attention that the income of the works this year was about $20,000; next year it would be at least $21,000; they had only been called upon to appropriate $2000—they paid the entire expenses including the interest, within that amount. That was what the works are doing to-day. The committee had recommended $7,100; make it $10,000 with the proviso would be an increase of only about $2,850,—and he was willing to favor it.

W. P. Clark hoped the amendment would not prevail; thought the judgment of the finance committee all that would be desired. The question was taken on this amendment and it was carried.

Articles 32, 37 and 41, being in reference to further extensions and covered by the amendment of Mr. Farnham were on motion of Isaac Hardy, indefinitely postponed.

The report of the committee to whom was referred the matter of an automatic fire alarm was then read and adopted. In substance it was thought to be inexpedient to make any appropriation for that purpose at the present time.

The finance committee also recommended the following expenditures which were adopted:

For support of the Poor	$9000
Addition to sinking funds	9000
Addition to High Service sinking fund	1600
Addition to Town House sinking fund	6000
For Board of Health	300
Interest on Town debt	2000
(including income from the water works)
Printing and Stationery	700
Miscellaneous and Incidental	1800

Also that the unexpended balance of last year's appropriations be continued, viz:

Town House fund	$36,309.93
Water works	2,295.46
High Service	1,000.00

The matter in reference to the amount to be raised by taxation was now taken from the table, and the recommendation of the committee that $90,000 be so raised, was adopted. The entire report as a whole was then accepted by a vote of 80 in the affirmative and none in the negative.

The report of the special committee to whom was referred articles 30 and 31, being in reference to the purchase of horse hose carriages to be located at the houses of 3 and 4 was read and accepted by the meeting. It was thought inexpedient to make any appropriation for the purpose at this time, but recommended that the firemen have power to hire horses for the use of these companies and that $150 be appropriated. The moderator ruled that the recommendation did not come within the province of the committee, and Mr. Littlefield stated that the engineers had always hired horses for this purpose when they could obtain them and when in their judgment desirable.

The report of the committee in reference to Article 34, being a petition for constructing a sewer in and through Spring street, was read and adopted. The committee was not in favor of the construction of the sewer by the town, thinking it would be the establishment of a bad precedent.

The committee in reference to Article 38th, in regard to improving the drainage in Sylvan street, in the vicinity of Pike & Whipple's factory, reported favorably, that an eight inch pipe be laid and that a sum not exceeding $500 be appropriated. Their report was adopted by a vote of 35 in the affirmative.

The committee in reference to Article 39, "to see if the town will appropriate money for the purpose of working and grading certain portions of Washington and Lynn streets, should such expenditures become necessary in consequence of the contemplated widening of such portions of said streets," reported in favor of an appropriation of $1,000 for that purpose, which was adopted, by a vote of 45 in the affirmative.

The finance committee also recommended the passage of the following:

Voted, That a committee of three be appointed by this meeting to consider the subject of "collection of Taxes," whether or not any change from the method now pursued be desirable, and to report to the Selectmen before Feb. 1884; and should such committee consider a change desirable, the Selectmen shall bring the subject before the next annual meeting by an article in the warrant for the same. This was passed and the committee appointed by the chair, viz: George F. Sanger, Levi Preston and William F. Wiley.

The following is a summary of the expenditures:

Town officers,	$4000
Firemen,	1900
Fuel and lights for Fire Dep't,	200
Purchase of new hose,	2250
Repairing & replacing hydrants,	500
Ordinary expenses of Fire De'pt,	3400
Repairs of highways & bridges,	10300
Lighting streets,	2500
Day and night police,	4500
Support of schools,	23500
Truant schools,	500
Cedar Grove Cemetery,	600
Extension & carrying on water works,	20400
Support of poor,	9000
Addition to sinking fund,	16600
Board of health,	300
Interest on town debt,	2000
Printing and stationery,	700
Miscellaneous and incidentals,	1200
Total,	$104,350
For drainage on Sylvan st.	500
Widening Washington street,	1000
	$105,850
Amount raised by taxation,	90,000
Balance,	$15,850

Frank E. Farnham moved that two more constables be added to the number already chosen. There was need of one in the vicinity of Central street, and of one who can serve writs. He moved that they be now chosen, and that the polls be kept open five minutes. Edgar Upton hoped the motion would not prevail. This was a put up job to elect a man who had failed of election at the last meeting. They probably had ballots all ready printed, while others were not so prepared. Mr. Farnham denied that it was a put up job; his only object was to accommodate the public. He could not see the objection. He was astonished and mortified that such a spirit should be shown. It was known that there was at present, since the decease of Mr. Upton, no person save Mr. Thomas to serve writs or civil processes. It was his living, and he thought the town should be willing to appoint him. Edgar Upton inquired if no other constable could be qualified to serve writs. Charles E. Hoag arose and sought to pour oil on the troubled waters. He admitted that any constable could serve, but it was a difficult undertaking. It takes time to become acquainted with all the business. Mr. Thomas had just began to get well initiated in it, and he desired to serve such processes. He had employed him in his practice, and he was informed that one reason for the non-appointment of a deputy sheriff in Mr. Upton's place was because we had now a constable to serve a civil process. He understood Mr. Thomas' name had been dropped for political reasons, and he should like to state how it was brought about. The moderator ruled him out of order, when he quietly took his seat. Mr. Farnham said nothing had been said, or could be said against the honor of Mr. Thomas. It was carrying the ostracism a little too far. We had been led to differ on local questions as citizens; hoped we should continue to differ. Competition in that line was as healthful as any line. We should not mark a man because of an honest difference of opinion. Mr. Upton said the only question was Mr. Thomas had been voted for at the last election, and had not been elected. Mr. Farnham's motion was lost—23 in the affirmative and 32 in the negative. The meeting then adjourned.

Our readers should not fail to visit the store of F. W. Lucas & Co., the New England Boot and Shoe Store in Salem. Mr. Lucas has recently returned from New York, and has in his stock all the latest novelties in the way of boots and shoes. The celebrated New York boot of P. Cox & Son, is a specialty in this store, and in all the nobby styles of ladies', misses' and gent's shoes he is constantly well stocked. The best quality of goods, low prices and one price only is the rule at this establishment.

The Naumkeag clothing store was so crowded with customers on Saturday that they were obliged to send out for extra help to wait upon them.

The spring goods which the Naumkeag clothing company are now offering are superior to anything ever before seen in Salem. Beautiful patterns elegantly made and trimmed.

South Peabody.—Last Sabbath was a red-letter day for the church and parish in this place, the congregation worshiping for the first time in the completed vestry of their new house. The day was in pleasant contrast with a long series of preceding Sabbaths. The spacious room was well filled by an interested and happy audience. The Pastor preached from the text of Psalm 122: 1, "I was glad when they said unto me, let us go into the house of the Lord." After describing the leading forms of worship in the Jewish Temple, he showed by citations from the Psalms, that the chief cause of the pious Israelites' delight in the Temple, was due to the fact that Jehovah here manifested himself in a peculiar manner to the people. "It was because God so manifested himself in this sacred place that the worshipers brought to it the glory of Lebanon, the fir tree, the pine tree and the box together, to beautify the place of His sanctuary." The bearing of this subject upon Christian worship in the churches of to-day was then shown, and the superiority of the latter worship over that of the former demonstrated; the old worship being explained as typical and prophetic, the worship of to-day being spiritual in its nature, and centering in Christ the Saviour, who had made the sacrifice for sin prefigured by the bleeding victim upon the temple altar. "It is true" said the preacher, "that God is to be loved and served everywhere; but his way as of old is in the sanctuary. Public worship bears such a relation to the private Christian life, that the latter is at its best estate when the former is constant and pure; and we simply follow a true instinct when we associate all that is elevating, and beautiful, and good, with the hallowed influences issuing from the services of the sanctuary." While nature is a revealer of God, her revelation is not so clear as that of the Scriptures. "He who turns his foot from the sanctuary, and instead of engaging in the Sabbath worship with God's people, saunters along the sea-shore, or through the silent woods, may have the emotions of sublimity and beauty quickened in his breast, but feels not the joyful assurance that through grace he has come into a living communion with God. God spoke to Moses out of the burning bush in lonely Horeb; then from the clouds about the top of Sinai; but afterwards, when his worship had been regulated, out of the Tabernacle. If, therefore, we would have God revealed unto us more clearly we must combine the service of the sanctuary with the meditations in its forests, on the mountain top, and by the sea."

In closing his discourse the pastor said: "It is the just appreciation of the worth of the house of God to the best interests of a people, that leads them to support it liberally; and it is natural that reverential feelings should prompt men to beautify the sanctuary. The want of a proper place for divine worship speaks ill of any community; and wherever there is a right spirit, and the means to carry out the promptings of that spirit, the house of the Lord will be established and properly cared for. It will not be allowed to fall into a dilapidated condition, but will be kept up to the requirements of the community; and it will express in its comfortable details and tasteful arrangements, the worshiper's sense of the fitness of things pertaining to a pure worship. We get no authority from the scriptures for supposing any place to be good enough for the public worship of God. While the sincere, devout soul can hold communion with God in any place, it is nevertheless true that our sanctified instincts will lead us to make glorious the spot where His honor dwelleth, to adorn and beautify the place where the people gather for worship and praise. We do not formally dedicate this house to-day, because it is not yet completed. We would, however, by these services consecrate these rooms—which constitute our Sunday School home, which are to be hallowed by the associations of the Prayer Meeting, and which are to be the pleasant, social resort of the church and parish—to the worship of the Triune God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit, trusting that soon this completed Temple may be dedicated in his great name."

At the close of the discourse the Lord's Supper was administered. In the evening, the vestry was again filled by a large company. There was Bible and Praise Service. Deacon Richard Smith, and Messrs. Hardy and Simat the South Church, formerly teachers in the S. School here, cheered the hearts of both pastor and people by their earnest words of sympathy and congratulation; bidding them God-speed in their good work. It was with difficulty that the people restrained themselves from open applause, whenever the speakers urged them to go on at once and complete the house. As it was there were some fervent responses of "Amen."

The people may well congratulate themselves over the possession of so beautiful a church and vestry. Everything is symmetrical in outline comfortable in detail, harmonious in coloring and chaste in finish. We enter the vestry on the east side of the church, through a porch in the rear of the tower. A wide entry and broad stairway communicate with the vestibule above, and the vestry below. On the left under the tower is the fuel room; the entry opens into the vestry by a wide doorway with double doors. The large room is nearly forty feet square, and is capable of seating two hundred or more. It is ten and a half feet in the clear. On the north side, there is an arch in the center of the partition wall. In this arch the platform is built, projecting about three and a half feet into the room. The partition divides the large vestry from the smaller rooms. The largest of these, on the left, is for the infant class and the use of the Ladies' Aid Society. The rooms on the right are the kitchen and library, conveniently fitted up; the floors of these rooms are of Southern pine, and the lower part of the walls are sheathed in narrow ash strips double braded. The breast of the platform and the steps are of the same material, also the window-shades, all this wood-work being properly filled and polished. A neat border in colored stencil gives a beautiful finish to the walls. The windows are of an attractive pattern, the sash lining divided about the outer edge in six inch squares. This style conforms to the general finish of the building which is of the Queen Anne type. The vestry is lighted by four large Oxford burners suspended from the centre of the ceiling, with white shades, and by bracket lamps on the walls with white globes. Over the desk, and from the center of the Ladies' Room hangs a large and beautiful lamp which can be lowered or elevated at will. It is proper to say here that the window-shades and the lamps are the gifts of the Ladies' Aid Society, while the platform carpet and the desk—which has not yet arrived—are given by the Sabbath School.

The whole workmanship and finish reflect great credit upon both the builders and decorators, and given great satisfaction to all. None but a chronic fault-finder could discover anything to grumble over.

The painters are now engaged in putting on the finishing touches which will complete the exterior of the house. The rich red-brown of spire and roof blending with the colors of the walls form a combination of tints that is very pleasing to the eye. May your correspondent be enabled in the course of a few months to describe the finish of the sanctuary and the dedication service.

A large number of invited relatives and friends called at the house of J. B. Newhall last Wednesday night, it being the 14th anniversary of his son Lester. The evening was spent with the usual games and singing by the young folks; an excellent supper was served, at which time Master Copeland presented him some very valuable presents. The party dispersed about half past ten well pleased with the evening's entertainment.

Miss Lizzie Davis has returned home from Texas after an absence of several months, very much improved in health.

All wishing to join the Glass Ball Club will please report at Geo. Shaw's store on Lynn St.

Messrs. Wingate & Co. have the plan for a new house for Geo. E. Marsh, of Lynn to be located on the site of the Mary Marsh house which was burned a few years since. It is to be Queen Anne style and a very pretty design.

Mrs. Adelaide Oliver received a back pension of nearly two thousand three hundred dollars from the Government, a few weeks since.

Quite a number of children in this part of the town are afflicted with the measles.

The exterior of the church has had its second coat of paint, and it is now an ornament to this section of the town.

Geo. Twiss, Jr., has so far recovered as to be able to get down as far as the town house last Monday.

The monthly meeting of the Ladies' Benevolent Society was held last Thursday evening in the parlors of the Unitarian chapel. Supper was served down stairs in abundance, and after all had been satisfied an hour or more was spent in social converse in the rooms above. Meantime the tables were removed and an entertainment was furnished in the vestry by some members of the Unity Club, consisting of a farce "Thirty Minutes for refreshments" and some vocal trios by Mrs. J. P. Fernald, Mrs. J. Henry Osgood and Mrs. F. C. Ferguson, with Mrs. Frank H. Stockwell as accompanist.

A novel entertainment is to be given at the Unitarian chapel, Tuesday evening, March 25, in the shape of "Aunt Polly Basset's Singin Skewl." Mrs. S. Quaife, under whose direction the affair is being managed gave the entertainment first at Beecher's church in Brooklyn, and since that time in different cities and towns in the country. Mrs. Quaife appears as "Aunt Polly Basset" her daughter as "darter Belinda," an old fashioned girl in whom all the fun centers, and there will be glees, rounds, and other singing by "ye skewl," consisting of various members of the Sabbath School of that church. Tickets will be for sale by B. F. Stevens.

On Monday evening there was a large attendance at the Murray Club the occassion being the presentation of a mock trial which proved very entertaining. The President C. S. Goldthwait, was a very amusing udge, Messrs. A. H. Merrill and Chas. E. Hoag, attorneys, displayed force as well as legal attainments, while a corps of witnesses and jurymen added to the general effect. The trial was for stealing an umbrella, which was produced in court and found to be of wonderful proportions. The whole matter was conducted on a grand scale and in the thorough manner for which the Murray is noted.

We regret to announce the sudden decease of William F. Shumway, a young man well known to all our readers, who died of measles in a malignant form last Saturday evening. Mr. Shumway came to this town some eleven years ago, and entered the employ of Guy Bros., and when this firm sold to Samuel Donnell & Sons, he was retained in their employ. In the pursuit of his calling he had occasion to visit the homes of many of our citizens, and his amiability, courtesy and promptness won for him hosts of friends He leaves a wife, the daughter of William Perkins. The store of his late employers was closed during the funeral, yesterday, at which Rev. J. W. Hudson officiated.

Preparations are being made for one of the grandest times on record at the coming firemen's ball, at Upton's Hall, Past eve, April 4th. The committee representing Steamers 1 and 2 and Hose 1 and H. & L. 1 are doing everything in their power to make the affair one of the pleasantest ever held here. Everything about the hall will be convenient and tasty and the floor put in splendid condition for dancing. The firemen deserve a large attendance and the committee have taken hold of the matter in earnest. Music will be furnished by the Salem Cadet Orchestra and Harvey Blunt of Boston will do the catering. An evening of music, mirth and social glee may be anticipated.

The Georgia minstrels, a company of genuine Ethiopian comedians, vocalists and musicians, headed by Tom McIntosh and Pete Devonear, and under the direction of Charles Callender, founder of the original "Georgias," appear in Mechanic Hall Friday evening, March 23. There are forty people in the company. Don't fail to see them.

The Equine Paradox closes this week at the Windsor, and after a week in Chelsea, it opens at Mechanic Hall Salem for a week, under Moulton & Johnson. It will be an event for Salem.

Easter Services.

Easter day was a beautiful Sabbath for the time of year, and the services at the different churches were well attended—in some of them unusually so. The custom is gradually growing of making some preparation—both by minister and choir—for the observance of this festal day. The chorister who recognizes the part which music plays in the services of the church will desire to be in harmony with the spirit of its days and occasions; and none afford better opportunities than that of Easter. There is a large repertoire from which to select; some of the best compositions of the masters are in unison with the thought of Easter and the resurection of our Lord. The music was well and carefully rendered in all the churches, and was in accordance with the programme published last week. At the Unitarian church in addition a fine duet by Misses Dalton and Felt was nicely sung. Below we give a brief outline of what was done at the different churches:

At the South Congregational church, Rev. Mr. Sperry preached from Acts, 7 chap. 55 and 56. "But he being full of the Holy Ghost, looked up steadfastly into Heaven, and saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God, and said, 'Behold I see the Heaven opened and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God." Mr Sperry called attention to the appropriateness of commemorating those days of Christ's stay on earth which mark preeminent events. Our Puritan fore-fathers forbade all such observances as savoring of popery; but we in the enlightenment of a loftier Christian spirit have returned to the commemoration of Christmas and Easter, and the next generation quite likely will commemorate Good Friday and Whit-Sunday. It is attractive, fitting and proper that we should do this. It inspires us with new faith and zeal and lifts us up nearer the throne of grace and mercy. Easter brings to us the contemplation of the Resurrection, the consummation of Christian faith. "Because I live, ye shall live also." Those who once walked among us vigorous and strong, have passed from life to death and their bodies are crumbled to dust. So we are prone to think of the future. As the tangible things of this world recede from our grasp, life seems vanishing into nothingness, till the glad annonncement "I am the resurrection and the life" relieves the heart ache and brings gladness to stricken souls. The Gospels brought life and immortality to light. We have no other knowledge of the future. In this vision of Stephen is opened to our gaze a view of what lies beyond—we see Jesus who has put all things under him at the right hand of God crowned with glory and honor. And he has gone to prepare a place for us, "If it were not so I would have told you." We shall, then, share his companionship and hear the sound of his voice, as did his disciples of old. Let us then look up to the risen Christ. The vision of the Son of man gives us an object of Spiritual desire. If we are not attracted by him our heaven is counterfeit, He that has an eye and a heart can even now say; Why should I falter; Light has come into the world; to such as love Light, so Light must be loved, with a boundless all-doing, all-enduring love. For the rest, let that vain struggle to read the mystery of the infinite cease to harass us. Do we not already know that the the name of the Infinite is Good, is God? "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do with all thy might." The gates of heaven will never close till all the followers of Christ on earth have entered in; we shall then see him face to face.

On the table in front of the pulpit was a beautiful display of pink azalias and calla lilies and stands of flowers on the right and left of the platform.

In the evening a service of song and scripture was held in the vestry. A chorus choir, under the direction of Rev. Mr. Sperry, sung the selections in a splendid manner, interpersed with reading passages of scripture, description of the death, passion and resurrective of our Lord, which was also commemorated in the songs. It was an interesting and appropriate closing service of Easter day. The attendance was large.

At the Universalist church, Rev. Mr. Sprague preached from Mark 16: 3-4. "Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre, etc." The speaker commenced by remarking that the future life was engaging more and more the serious thought of mankind; what is death, and what after death? It has a perennial interest, culminating in the Easter festival. The desire to know the future is natural to man, especially in regard to spiritual things. It is general, and is manifested even where the Bible is not. The strength of a belief in the future existence is sometimes in inverse proportion to education, some of the most barbarous tribes never doubting the future existence, or that spirits linger near the tombs of the departed. This belief has been a prominent factor in all systems of religion. They have hazarded little and gained much by it. Mr. Sprague briefly sketched the history of a belief in immortality, referring to Egypt, and the teachings of Osiris, where it was plainly taught, even extending to the preservation of the old body and where the progress of death was sought to be arrested by the embalming of the body; to Persia and Zoroaster, in which religion the future life held a prominent place, where different orders of spirits were considered to be in confliot and life passes into light, the Hindoo regarding it as the highest good to be absorbed into infinite spirit, and where sin was believed to be the cause of transmigration of souls; to Greece, where higher views were entertained. Here progress of thought was apparent, Achilles having said he would rather till the earth than live in Elysium, while Socrates expressed the idea of immortality with clearness and precision; and finally to the Jews, where it is conceded that no mention of a future life is found in the early Jewish Scriptures. The Pharisees believed in a resurrection, and were opposed by the Sadducees, even in Jesus' time. Their belief was mixed with transmigration of souls. When, however, the women came to the tomb of Jesus they were prepared to believe. When they saw the stone rolled away they remembered what he had said. The life to which he had gone put on a new and higher meaning, and his disciples began to preach Christ and the resurrection. The future life is the pivotal truth in the Christian religion. The transcendant excellence of Christianity consists in the deep reality given to both worlds. The gospel brought life and immortality together. The germ of futurity is lying in the present but is unfolded in the future. From the resurrection the preacher deduced the following thoughts in substance: 1st, immediately at death the soul goes to the spirit world clothed in a spiritual body, separate from God and other spirits, where we shall know ourselves, remember our earthly life and environments, and be able to recognize and know our friends; 2d, we will be free from the infirmities, sins, temptations and sorrows of the flesh; 3d, we shall have a better opportunity and a stronger inclination for the improvement and enjoyment of our powers both intellectual and spiritual; 4th, that if we have not received a just measure of reward or punishment here, we will be fully recompensed or punished hereafter, until we are rightly recompensed or until we turn and do God's will; 5th, that the sole object for which God may punish us in the next life will be to correct us, and as soon as a soul is truly repentant and turns to God, He will receive his erring child with a father's blessing and love; 6th, that in a higher and purer atmosphere we will steadily progress in righteousness, joy and peace; finally that all men shall at last be saved from all sin and sorrow and perfect themselves in goodness, through the omnipotent love of God in Christ, where all tears shall be wiped away, and God be all in all.

In the evening an Easter concert was given under the direction of the classes of Geo. Randall and Miss Batchelder. A very large audience was present and the exercise for Easter consisting of singing and recitations was a source of pleasure and profit to all.

There was a good attendance at the Methodist church on Easter Sunday. The pastor, Rev. Dr. Steele, occupied the pulpit and selected his text from Isaiah 42: 4, after reading for a scriptural lesson a part of the 2d and 16th Psalms. He began his discourse by picturing to his audience a youth, who started out from an obscure village determined to conquer the world, but not as other great men, with military, the press, with flattery and oratory, but the conquest at which he aimed was the conquest of their wills; the radical transformation of men. Just consider his undertaking, in those days when wrong was universal and human government had become a farce and impure worship was on every hand. Rome was writhing in moral corruption, while in thousands of homes the sickening odor of human sacrifices was of daily occurrence; vice had attacked the whole human family and so low were the morals, that a premium was offered for a legitimate child. But the magnitude of the work did not discourage the young carpenter. Jesus predicted his own success although He knew all previous ones had failed, and the bloody cross looming up before him did not discourage him, and as a result Jesus Christ controls so much of the world to-day, that He will control the whole at last. What wondrous confidence dwelt in His bosom? He knew that even death would not stop His work; this was a trifling incident as He knew He would rise again the third day and that would only serve to make His gospel as strong as the pillars of the eternal kingdom. Another thing that gave Christ confidence was, that He had an ally in every bosom. There is a chord in every human soul which if touched by the Lord will respond, and Jesus knows the way to every heart, and there is hope for every man. He had the consciousness of being a sinless man. All the assaults of Satan rebounded, so if there was in the clay a sinless man, so can there be in this world sinless men. It is true that the spirit visits every man's soul and man has only to apply what has been revealed to him. Christ depends to further His work, upon the churches to be His agents, and the King expects every one to seize their weapons and use them. This example of Christ should teach us that He is at the helm, and it should be the antidote for that vein of doubt which will often confront us, that of small results in our work. Let us keep near the great Captain and we shall hear his words, "I have conquered the world." In the evening a missionary concert was given of unusual interest.

At the Unitarian Church, a service was held at 10.15 A. M., by the Sabbath school, of a musical character chiefly, that was attended by a large number of the congregation. At 2.15 P. M., Rev. Mr. Hudson preached on the power of Christ's Resurrection as a power which manifests itself not only in that wonderful event, but in many other things, and may be traced all through nature and life. Without the Resurrection, the light of the New Testament is put out; like an unfinished drama its meaning becomes obscure and dark, or speaks the language of defeated hope and sadness rather than that of triumph and joy. The spirit of Easter is in profound accord with a principle which is very important both in nature and life. God is constantly seen to be opening up ways from darkness into light, from effort into fruition, from death into life. The natural world is full of Easter occasions, and in fact they give us the key to the meaning of nature. As every winter has its spring, so every night has its morning. If we firmly trust that life itself with all its trial is a great preparation, and is to be transfigured into a higher life beyond this, we shall be far nobler and happier than we could be without such trust. The testimony of the New Testament to immortality is not to be found so much in a detailed description of the future life as in its suggestion of the powers of the world to come. It describes Heaven as a strain of music might describe it. In closing, Mr. Hudson alluded to the fact that a large number of persons connected with the history of the church from the beginning had been called to a higher life during the past year. Their memory is tenderly cherished.

At the close of the services there was a baptismal service and the celebration of the Lord's supper. The church was decorated with Easter lilies, and a fine display of other flowers, and an appropriate selection of scripture on the walls, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

In St. Paul's Church, Rev. George Walker preached at 10.15, from Revelations i: 18. "I am He that liveth; and was dead: and behold, I am alive for evermore; Amen—and have the keys of hell and of death." The Resurrection is the great subject for to-day. This is the central doctrine of the Christian Faith. Held the chief place in the preaching of the Apostles. Without this, as St. Paul says, our preaching is vain and your faith is also vain. Great is the joy of this day. This is indeed "the day which the Lord hath made." But why is the joy of Easter Day so great? It is from the contrast which we now behold. But three days ago we saw by faith the death and burial of the Lord. Picture again to yourselves the Crucifixion. Behold the proof that Jesus Christ was dead—the soldiers' spear—the sepulchre. How great to-day, is the contrast—"I am He that liveth and was dead. Is the joy of our hearts great to-day?—then it must too be the joy of contrast. We have during the solemn season of Lent meditated upon the deadness of our nature apart from Christ our Lord; and, as we have died with Him unto sin, our joy is vast as we rise with Him to-day, and speaking in Him we say "I am he that liveth and was dead." But not only does He live but he lives for evermore. "Death has no more dominion over Him." In Him we have eternal life. "I am the resurrection and the life—he that believeth in me though he were dead yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." "O death! where is thy sting, O grave where is thy victory?" "And have the keys of hell and of death." He has unlocked the gate of everlasting life. While the body of the blessed Lord lay in the grave His blessed spirit "went and preached to the spirits in prison." He has given to His Church the power of the keys. Are we careful in using this power committed to His Mystical Body which He has left us in the world? He is verily with us in His Mystical Body to unlock the door of the Kingdom of Heaven to all who dwell in Him.

Rev. J. W. Colwell preached in the School House, West Peabody, Sabbath, A. M.; and at the Church in South Peabody in the P. M., from John xi: 25, 25. "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." After alluding to the occasion on which these words were spoken the right of the Saviour to assume these titles of Resurrection and Life, was shown; first, by his work of raising the dead to life again, as in the case of the daughter of Jarius, the son of the widow of Nain, and Lazarus; secondly, by his own glorious resurrection from the dead. "Christ is the fountain of life." As he is the author or cause of the resurrection, he may be said to be "the resurrection;" as he is the author of life, he may be called "the life." The pastor then gave in outline the proof of the resurrection of our Lord. This strong tower of truth has been assailed in vain by the enemies of Christianity. We do not believe in a "cunningly devised fable," but in a fact proved by evidence which has never been broken. "Christ is thus the resurrection of the dead and the life of the living." All who die with faith in him shall live again, in his glory. And the life eternal is the believer's portion even in this life;—"He that hath the Son hath life." "This life will expand and bloom in fullness of beauty, in the fairer soil and sweeter clime of heaven." But the blessings of this life as suggested by the text are conditioned upon the individual faith. If ours is to be the resurrection of the just, Christ must be our life now. If he shall raise us up from spiritual death the second death shall have no power over us.

At West Peabody two bouquets of flowers graced the desk which was also festooned in evergreen. A cross and festoon of the same, hung upon the wall behind the pulpit. At South Peabody there were no flowers. In the evening at the latter place there was a prayer meeting, the theme of the afternoon being continued.

At St. John's Church, the services were the same as published in last week's PRESS. Father Masterson preached on the Resurrection, taking his text from the Gospel of St. Mark, xvi: 1-7. "And the angel saith to them, be not affrighted; ye seek Jesus of Nazareth, who was crucified; He is risen, He is not here; behold the place where they laid Him." It was a highly theological discourse, the tenor of which was that the inception of the Catholic Church was of divine origin, that the grave is not the final home of man and that we will all have our resurrection.

PEABODY.

The machine shop of J. E. CLEMENT & Co., on Wallis street, now that it has been enlarged and new machinery and tools added, is well worth a visit. Mr. Clement has been in his present quarters about three years. Last fall the building, which is 95 feet in length, with a width of 35 feet, was enlarged by the addition of another story, making a handsome two and a half story building and a great improvement to the corner of the street on which it stands. With enlarged quarters came a demand for new and modern machinery, and he has made some extensive additions, giving him facilities for work not equalled outside of the city of Boston. The first machine arrived about Feb. 1st, the last one week before last. The shop now has facilities for nearly every kind of work. There is a blacksmith shop in the rear, connected with the main building, under the charge of the veteran John R. Deering, for many years in the machine shop of the Boston & Maine R. R. There is an immense trip hammer, capable of drawing a three inch bar of steel down at a single draw; two forges, a blast and hand forge, and a boiler of 25 horse power. A new engine of 20 horse power is to be put in very shortly, in a new room, prepared for it. The machinery on the lower floor consists of a large lathe, having a bed of 17 feet, and a 40 inch swing, another with a 12 feet bed and 30 inch swing; a boring mill, one of the new machines, made by David W. Pond of Worcester, which bores and turns fly wheels and pulleys. It will turn a wheel 6 1-2 feet in diameter, and bore any size. It weighs about 12 tons. There is near it the new planer, an elaborate and costly affair. It is a double head planer, capable of doing two jobs at once, and will plane a piece of iron 42 inches square and seventeen feet in length. It can be used to plane from 5 inches to 17 feet. It occupies a space in the building 28 feet long and 8 feet wide, and weighs twenty tons. There is also an upright drill, a small planer, eight feet long and two feet square, a pulley lathe, for turning large pulleys, and a machine for cutting pipe from 1-4 inch to 4 inches. There is also an attachment for the large lathe which turns and polishes at one cut any shafting. In the eastern end of the building is the stock room, 10x15, containing about 170 bins for pipe fittings and such material; the office opposite, with an interior private office connected, just being built by Mr. Ferguson, in black walnut trimmings, and everything to correspond with the outer or main office. We ascend the stairs, and previously we notice a large elevator, between the two floors, capable of hoisting three tons in weight. Up stairs there are lathes of different sizes, five engine lathes and one speed lathe, the latter especially designed for Mr. Clement by F. C. Ferguson; a bolt cutting machine, a machine called a "shaper," built in the establishment, and a large upright quick return drill. This latter is a new machine, built by Pond of Worcester. In the rear of the shop, up one flight, is the pattern room of our friend Ferguson, and a light, cosy and cheerful room it is. It is 20x30, and fitted up with all the tools and machinery necessary for model and pattern making. The machinery used by Mr. Ferguson was all designed by himself for his own use, and manufactured for him by Mr. Clement. There is a jig saw, making 660 revolutions a minute, a circular saw making 3000 revolutions, a wood turning lathe, an especial invention of Mr. Ferguson, and which makes 4500 revolutions a minute. In addition Mr. Ferguson has a large kit of tools in use in his business, many of them purchased in Hamburg and in England. Mr. Ferguson is a first class workman, and deserves the patronage of all who have anything in the line of pattern or model work to do.

The shop of Messrs. Clement & Co. is now prepared for all kinds of machine work. They employ from eighteen to twenty men, and are the sole manufacturers of the McDonald Unhairing and hide working machine, of which they are making one a week. The different departments are connected with each other by an acoustic telephone, and altogether it is one of the best appointed machine shops in the country, and Messrs. Clement & Co. deserve the patronage which we are pleased to learn, is largely on the increase.

Poet's Corner.

A Song of Manhood.

Who shall judge man from his manner,
Who shall know him by his dress?
Paupers may be fit for Princes,
Princes fit for nothing else.
Crumpled shirt and dirty jacket,
May beclothe the golden ore
Of the deepest thoughts and feelings—
Satin vest can do no more.

There are streams of crystal nectar,
Ever flowing out of stone;
There are purple beds and golden,
Hidden, crushed and overthrown.
God, who counts by souls, not dresses,
Loves and prospers you and me,
While He values thrones the highest,
But as pebbles in the sea.

Man, upraised above his fellows,
Oft forgets his fellows then;
Masters—rulers—lords, remember
That your meanest kinds are men!
Men of labor, men of feeling,
Men of thoughts and men of fame,
Claiming equal rights to sunshine
In a man's ennobling name.

There are foam-embroidered oceans,
There are little wood-clad rills;
There are feeble, inch-high saplings,
There are cedars on the hills.
God, who counts by souls, not stations,
Loves and prospers you and me;
For to Him all vague distinctions
Are as pebbles in the sea.

Toiling hands alone are builders
Of the nation's wealth and fame;
Titled laziness is pensioned,
Fed and fattened on the same.
By the sweat of others' foreheads,
Living only to rejoice,
While the poor man's outraged freedom
Vainly lifts its feeble voice.

Truth and justice are eternal,
Born with loveliness and light;
Secret wrongs shall never prosper
While there is a sunny right.
God, whose world-wide voice is singing
Boundless love to you and me,
Links oppression, with its titles,
But as pebbles in the sea.

Abide with Me.

Abide with me: fast falls the even-tide;
The darkness deepens: Lord, with me abide:
When other helpers fail, and comforts flee,
Help of the helpless, O abide with me.

Swift to its close ebbs out life's little day;
Earth's joys grow dim, its glories pass away;
Change and decay in all around I see;
O Thou who changest not, abide with me.

I fear no foe, with Thee at hand to bless:
Ills have no weight, and tears no bitterness,
Where is death's sting? where, grave, thy victory?
I triumph still, if Thou abide with me.

I need Thy presence every passing hour;
What but Thy grace can foil the tempter's pow'r?
Who like Thyself my guide and stay can be?
Through cloud and sunshine, Lord, abide with me.

Selected Story.

Getting a Wife By Mistake.

BY PAUL V.

"I'll ask her to marry me this very day. To be sure she's young; but it will renew my youth to have her for a wife. I must first speak to her aunt, and get her consent. Uncommon fine women is Marcia; more suited to my age, I dare say than her pretty niece; but Mollie I love, and Mollie I will marry, if she will have me. Strange I should be such a fool over a girl at my age. Here I have lived single for fifty years, and have looked forward to spending the rest of my life in some peaceful manner; but as soon as I saw Mollie I forgot all about that. I declare I fell in love with her on the spot. I'm an old fool, but, as I said before, I'll marry her if she will have me."

This conclusion was reached by Mr. Theodore Piper after many hours of anxious thought, during which he had viewed the subject from every standpoint, carefully reasoning away all doubts; for, in spite of the fact that for the first time in his life he was in love, he was not so blind that he could not dimly perceive the folly of his intentions. He had lived a bachelor all his life, feeling no desire to change his condition, when fate, in the person of Miss Mollie Danvers, upset all his placid serenity, scattered to the winds his visions of a peaceful future of single blessedness, and created within him a desire to possess her for a wife.

Mollie Danvers was the orphan niece of Miss Marcia Parmlee, who lived in a charming cottage in the high street of the pretty village of Cherryfield. Upon the death of her widowed sister, fourteen years before my story opens, she took her orphaned daughter, then a child of four years, to her heart and home. She never regretted her kindness, for with the coming of the bright little fairy to her quiet home came also a great source of pleasure into her lonely life, and she often found herself wondering what she should do without the mischievous child who was at once the pride and torment of her existence.

Thus life flowed on, calmly and uneventfully for ten years, till Mollie was fourteen, and Miss Marcia decided that she must go away to school, and receive the advantages of a better education than the village academy afforded; and she was forthwith sent to Madame Blank's select seminary for young ladies (situated in a distant town), to go through a four years' course.

During the last year of her absence at the school the population of Cherryfield was increased by the arrival of Mr. Theodore Piper, who purchased a handsome residence next door to Miss Parmlee's pretty cottage, and settled down with two or three staid old servants to keep his household affairs in running order. Great was the excitement of the old maid element of the village—Miss Marcia excepted—over his coming, and many were the efforts put forth to attract the attention of the wealthy bachelor, who, however, while polite to all, seduously refrained from asking any of the anxious fair ones to share his lot.

He lived a very quiet life, avoiding society as he was very bashful; and it was some time before he overcame his aversion to females sufficiently to be neighborly with Miss Marcia; but finding after a while, that she had no designs upon him, and not being so much afraid of the kind-hearted but somewhat prim, old maid as of the rest of the Cherryfield spinsters, he gradually became quite sociable, and often used to send her fine fruits and vegetables from his own garden. Miss Marcia thought him "a very nice man," and was often beguiled out of her primness as they talked in a neighborly fashion, telling him of Mollie, and how proud she was of her.

Thus things went on until the last year of Mollie's stay at school drew to a close. One morning in June, Mr. Piper crossed his garden and presented himself at Miss Parmlee's side door with a basket of very fine strawberries. It was opened by the usual serene spinster herself, to all appearances in a state of great excitement, while from the glimpse he obtained of the interior of the cottage, he concluded that a revolution of some sort was going on.

After receiving the berries and thanking him for them, she said, "My niece is coming home on Saturday. I have not seen her since her last vacation, a year ago. She has finished school now and is coming home for good. The house is all upset; but do come in, won't you?"

Hastily declining her invitation, Mr. Piper wended his way towards his domicile in no pleasant mood at a prospect of an addition to his neighbors' small family.

"Oh, dear!" he groaned. "To-day is Thursday, and she's coming on Saturday. Only one more day of peace and quietness. Of course she's a flighty young thing, who will upset the whole neighborhood with her tantrums. Just as I had got settled and was living quietly, to be tormented so—it is really too bad."

Thus with great apprehension and many misgivings on his part, and much scrubbing, dusting, and airing by Miss Marcia, Friday and Saturday passed, and just as cool summer dusk was falling, Mollie came.

When she came into the pretty parlor, her aunt stood and looked at her. Such a change as the last year had made! Such a very pretty Mollie, blue-eyed and dimple-cheeked, with mischief in every flash of the bright eyes and every curve of the pretty mouth.

"Well, auntie, what do you think of me? Have I not grown, and am I not a very charming young lady?" said Mollie, with a merry laugh, as she tossed her hat in one direction, gloves and parasol in another, and, without waiting for a reply to her question, proceeded to inform her aunt that she was desperately hungry.

This awoke Miss Marcia's hospitality, and bustling about, she soon had Mollie seated at a well-spread table, to whose contents she did ample justice, while her aunt, with unusual volubility, proceeded to enlighten her in regard to Cherryfield affairs, not forgetting to mention Mr. Piper, and say, "Such a nice man, dear! only very bashful. I know you will like him."

After the repast was finished, Mollie bade her aunt good night, and retired to close her blue eyes in slumber, and dream of handsome Jack Morris, to whom she was engaged.

Jack Morris was the only son of Farmer Morris, of Cherryfield, and he and Mollie had been friends and playmates in childhood. The year before Mollie was sent away to school Jack was sent to London to study law, and they did not meet again for four years, when, his studies over, Jack came home to spend a few weeks before beginning life as a lawyer. Mollie was home on her annual vacation at the same time, and they met, fell in love and became engaged with the full consent and approval of the elders. They were to be married as soon as Jack was well established in business, but no one outside of the two families was aware of the existing engagement.

Sunday morning broke, clear and lovely, and Mr. Piper cautiously unclosed his blinds, and took a survey of his neighbor's premises. Everything was as quiet as usual, so he said to himself, "Suppose the young lady is not up yet, or perhaps, it being Sunday, she will be quiet. Time enough for her racket yet."

As he finished speaking, a female form appeared at the door, and fair Miss Mollie stepped out upon the lawn, making a charming picture as she stood shading her eyes with one hand from the sun, and drinking in the beauty of the summer morning. Mr. Piper stood spell-bound before such loveliness. As he gazed his prievously formed prejudice against his fair neighbor vanished, and he was only recalled to himself by the appearance of Miss Marcia calling her neice to breakfast.

From that time Mr. Piper knew no rest until he had called and been introduced to Mollie. He called frequently after that, and the neighbors began to wonder at the change in shy Mr. Piper.

After two or three visits, astute Mollie saw how the land lay, and resolved upon some fun to wile away the tedious weeks until Jack should come to turn Cherryfield into an earthly Paradise.

Although as desperately in love as old bachelors are apt to be when they finally do succumb to the charms of some fair one, Mr. Piper was so bashful that he hardly looked at Mollie, but spent his time during his frequent calls in conversing with her aunt. This just suited Mollie, and the mischievous girl set about deluding her aunt into the belief that Mr. Piper was "courting" her.

Miss Marcia would not listen to a word on the subject at first, but as Mr. Piper's visits became more frequent as the days went by, and Mollie never let an opportunity slip to sing his praises and descant upon his apparent devotion to her, that lady was at last forced to believe that he really intended asking her to become his wife.

Great was Mollie's amusement at the many little attempts of personal adornment on the part of her aunt.

Miss Marcia was in her youth quite pretty, and even now, at forty-five, few women of her age could boast of such thick, glossy hair, clear eyes and smooth skin. She really seemed to be growing young again.

June passed, and July was drawing to a close, when Mr. Piper was called away to town on business. During his absence Jack Morris came, and proceeded to spend much of his time with his fair betrothed. He was duly enlightened concerning Mr. Piper, and, together with Mollie, pictured with great relish that gentleman's chagrin when he learned of their engagement.

After a week's absence, Mr. Piper returned, and proved the truth of the old saying that "absence makes the heart growfonder" by realizing himself more desperately in love than before.

He arose the morning following his arrival home, after spending a restless night considering the case, fully determined on asking Mollie to marry him, and while in this frame of mind expressed himself as at the beginning of this story.

After breakfast, he took a walk in his garden, and seeing Mollie on the lawn, called out, "Miss Mollie, please tell your aunt that I'm coming over this afternoon on important business."

Mollie delivered the message in such a manner that Miss Marcia was convinced that the important moment had arrived, and Mr. Piper must be coming to propose.

At four that afternoon, as Mollie lay swinging lazily in the hammock, a perfect picture in white muslin and blue ribbons, she heard the gate turn on its hinges, and looking around beheld Mr. Piper coming up the walk, his face very red from the combined effects of the heat and nervousness, and a look of desperation overspreading his features.

Hardly had his portly form vanished within the door before Jack Morris came strolling down the street and approached his divinity, who by this time was in convulsions of laughter.

"Might I ask the cause of your hilarity, fair one?" said he. "It must be something uncommonly rich to cause such merriment on such a very hot day as this."

"Oh, Jack!" gasped Mollie as soon as her mirth subsided sufficiently to allow of speech; "Mr. Piper has gone into the house to see auntie, and I am almost sure he intends asking her for me. It's too funny, and yet I feel a little guilty when I think how I have persuaded her to believe that it is herself and not me, in whom our venerable friend is interested. I wish I could see the fun! I am dying to know what he will say. Stay—I have it! Let's go around to the window where the honeysuckle vine grows, and we can see and hear without being discovered."

No sooner said than done. They hastened to the spot, and esconcing themselves in the shadow of the thickly-growing vines, found they had an excellent view of the room and its inmates, and were in no danger of being seen by them. They arrived just as Mr. Piper drew his chair to Miss Marcia's side and said nervously, "I—ah—called this afternoon—ah—awful hot day, ma'am—to—ah—to speak to you on a very important subject. You must know from my frequent visits," continued he, gaining courage as he went along, "something of my feelings, and may be aware of my intentions."

Here Mr. Piper paused, but receiving no reply went on. "To tell you the truth, Miss Marcia, I am in love, and I came over this afternoon to ask if you can give me any hope that my love is returned. You ought to be able to tell me."

This speech had the effect of confirming Miss Marcia's belief that Mr. Piper wanted her, and no one else; and with a blush that made her look ten years younger, she exclaimed, "Why, really, Mr. Piper, this is a surprise! I had no idea you cared for me except as a friend. I don't know what to say, except to tell you that I value your regard very highly, and that I return your affection."

Mr. Piper's face during this speech was a study. He turned red, white, and finally red again, as he grasped the meaning of her words and realized the scrape he was in. Words cannot do justice to his state of mind. He inwardly cursed himself for his stupidity in not speaking more plainly, and making a desperate effort to explain, the poor man gasped out, "I—really—can't thank you enough for your preference. But—

"Oh, never mind!" interrupted she, pitying his embarrassment, and bent on relieving his confusion. "Don't thank me. I'm sure you are very kind to want an old maid like me, when there are so many younger ones. How surprised Mollie will be! She will be glad, too, I know, dear child, that she won't leave me alone when she is married."

"Married!" he almost shouted, in his surprise. "Is she going to be married?"

"Yes; it is not generally known, but she is engaged to Farmer Morris's son, and they are to be married in a year. I don't wonder you are surprised; she seems such a child."

Mr. Piper's heart went into his boots. He was silent a moment, but during that time he did a great deal of thinking. He realized that Mollie was lost to him now, even if he explained matters to Miss Marcia, and got free of his present entanglement.

With that thought in his mind, it did not seem of much importance what became of him, and being too much of a gentlemen to inflict humiliation upon one whom he respected as much as he did Miss Marcia, he resolved to let things stand as they were, and make the best of it; so he gallantly took her hand and kissed it, saying, "Then you will marry me? When shall it be? Name an early day, please."

At this juncture, the two arch plotters at the window could contain themselves no longer, and they hastily retreated to the other side of the lawn, where Mollie gave vent to her surprise by a succession of "Did you ever!" while Jack rolled on the grass overcome with laughter at the sight of Mollie's bewildered face over the unexpected denouement of her scheme.

Two months later there was a quiet wedding at the cottage, and Miss Marcia and Mr. Piper were made one. During the weeks preceding the event Mr. Piper became first reconciled, then satisfied, and finally happy, over his prospects for the future.

Miss Marcia grew younger and prettier every day, and was so kind, sensible and in every way suited to him, that he never regretted the blunder which gave him such a good wife.

The Lost Child.

A FATE WORSE THAN ABDUCTION.

How Parents, by a Lack of Precaution and Care, are Responsible for the Death of Their Children.

(Camden, Me., Herald.)

The moral and legal responsibility of parents in the care of their children is, fortunately, attracting the serious attention of the better portion of the entire country. The many instances of child beating, oppression, and other forms of cruelty, which have come to light, demand that something be done; and it is gratifying to know that the people are becoming thoroughly aroused. Whether the cruelty be in the form of physical violence or physical neglect matters not—the principle in both cases is the same. The man or woman who neglects his or her own health may be pardoned, as the consequences fall upon the individual alone; but the parent or guardian who permit the inroads of disease upon the innocent ones dependent upon him for protection, is criminally liable in the sight of God, however he may appear in the eyes of men. There are, however, parents that intend to care for their children, but who, through carelessness or the urgency of other duties, permit them to become the innocent victims of disease. Such parents may be guiltless of intentional wrong, but the disastrous results upon their children are just as great.

These are truths which must be manifest to every worthy parent and especially in a vicinity where the unknown effects of the atmosphere, the water and the general tendency to malaria are so great. There are many families in this locality who have been called upon to mourn untimely losses, even when the greatest care was exercised; but the experience of one only will be given: It is that of the late W. O. Thomas. The children were all most promising, but for some unexplained reason their health and strength seemed to gradually lessen until their friends feared they were the victims of consumption. One by one, they sickened and died until three had departed and two of the surviving brothers were also taken ill. Their names were Hermon and Edward. Hermon, however, seemed the stronger of the two; and, while his younger brother was confined to the house constantly, and to his bed much of the time, Hermon was able to be about but in so weak a condition that he had no desire to play. Eddie's symptoms were terrible! He found difficulty in retaining food upon his stomach, was restless and irritable, and ont of his head frequently. At various times three different physicians visited him, and each one told his friends he could not live. He finally got so low that death was only considered a matter of a few days. At that critical time his elder brothers, aroused almost to the pitch of desperation by the three deaths that had so recently occurred, and the other one staring them in the face, resolved to take the case into their own hands. They accordingly did so, and secured a remedy that was then being universally used, and began giving it to him. Its effect at first was slight, but any improvement was considered a good symptom. By degrees his strength returned; he was able to eat with a relish, then walk about the house, and finally he regained complete health and strength. The boy was so rejoiced over his recovery that, accompanied by the editor of this paper, he went before Justice Charles K. Miller and made oath to the facts of his sickness as above related, and that he was restored to perfect health by the use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

Now, Edward Thomas' parents, while they lived, undoubtedly provided faithfully for the wants of all their children; and yet the seeds of disease had taken deep root. Their care in one direction had been counteracted by unknown carelessness in another. Their love was sincere, but wholly misdirected. They should have known that children are just as liable to kidney and liver diseases as grown up people, and that the fatality of Bright's disease of the kidneys is just as great among little children as with adults. This is a serious subject. Hereditary traits; the after consequences of measles and scarlet fever, diphtheria and the passing troubles which so easily become chronic, all demand the greatest care and caution. No case of cholera infantum, measles, scarletina, or diphtheria was ever virulent while the child's kidneys and liver were healthy. It would simply be an impossibility. These important organs of the body are just forming within the child and growing with its growth; and they can be trained to strength and health as readily as the little mind can be trained to truth and uprightness.

The importance of carefully watching the slightest troubles of the child, and especially those affecting the kidneys and liver, cannot be too strongly emphasized. Children respond so readily to the proper remedies and are so sensitive to disease, that it is a sin to deprive them of one at the risk of incurring the other. By a judicious treatment these essential organs can be developed so that a strong constitution, able to resist the inroads of disease through coming years, shall be the result.

"One Word from the Loved Ones at Home," by Eva J. R. White—the great Boston song—being sung everywhere—written by one of Boston's popular vocalists. To be had at music stores everywhere. Price, 35 cents.

An April Song.

BY LYDIA DAVIS THOMPSON.

'Tis April-time, sweet April-time—
Though now and then the snowflakes fall,
It will not mar our simple rhyme,
Nor cast o'er us a gloomy pall.
Though sun and snow and rain together,
Give us each hour a change of weather,
We know amid the light and gloom,
That earth is bursting into bloom.

The fragrant willows o'er the brooks
Will soon their tasseled boughs be bending
And daises in their sheltered nooks,
To woodland dells new beauty lending;
There's joy in every passing breeze,
That whispers through the budding trees,
Swift wandering from the South land far,
That sets the gates for Spring ajar.

And wakened from her rosy sleep,
She comes with light and airy feet,
O'er vale and lea and ocean deep,
And fills the air with perfume sweet;
And leaves uncurl, and grasses grow,
For everything around, below,
She touches with her magic wand,
And life comes forth at her command.

I hear her laughter in the rills,
Her voice in happy birdlings' song,
That floats far o'er the echoing hills,
Borne on the balmy breeze along,
Tis time fo lay dull thought aside
And joy with Earth at glad springtide;
To send abroad our simple rhyme,
To help greet in sweet April-time-

For many years it has seemed impossible for the people of the United States to get enough diamonds. A handsome diamond was for a long time considered the first requisite of a negro minstrel, a western steamboat captain, a barkeeper or a betrothed damsel, and when shoddy and petroleum endeavored to push vulgar people into prominence they always looked to diamonds for assistance. Now however, it is reported that the diamond business is so dull that several firms are embarrassed. Overstocking is the alleged reason, but there may be others, and one is that as Americans learn more about precious stones they, like other people of taste, admire and wear other gems as well as diamonds. The diamond trade has probably not been helped either by the general discovery that for some years a good imitation diamond may be more brilliant than the average of genuine stones. People have learned, too, that there are diamonds and diamonds, and they are no longer willing to buy the defective and badly cut stones of which the market is full.

"Richelieu" Robinson, the excitable New York congressman, wants the United States government to buy Ireland. If the Green Isle could be towed across the water, and located just outside of New York bay, what a recruiting ground it would make for metropolitan politicians!

A boy with a top tried to spin it,
But his hand got a thorn right in it,
The sport didn't spoil,
For St. Jacobs Oil,
Cured his hurt in less than a minit.

A red-haired clerk in Savannah,
Slipped on a piece of banana,
Great pain he endured,
But St. Jacobs Oil cured,
He now goes dancing with Hannah.

The Scientific American says that knit goods are now made to a large exent from cotton alone; that fully one-half of the knit shirts and drawers made in this country contain no wool at all. Great attention is paid to bleaching and dyeing and in making white goods, two or three particular shades of white are given to tne fabrics according as it is desired to represent Texas, Ohio or California wool. Probably many an unexpected cold during the past winter has been due to the victim supposing he was provided with woolen underclothing, when the fact was that he was clad in cotton only. In this particular at least one had better avoid cheap articles and accept only the best.

MILLIONS GIVEN AWAY.

Millions of bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, have been given away as Trial Bottles of the large size. This enormous outlay would be disastrous to the proprietors, were it not for the rare merits possessed by the wonderful medicine. Call at Spaulding's Drug Store and get a Trial Bottle free, and try for yourself. It never fails to cure.

When you see a prominent citizen, a bright and shining light in society, an energetic man of business, and all that sort of thing, pause in the middle of the sidewalk and gaze about him with a glassy look in his eyes, you needn't think of apoplexy and paralysis. He is simply trying to remember an errand his wife told him to do.

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

PEABODY.

The long talked of Camp-fire was lighted on last Wednesday evening, and although we wish more citizens had been admitted to the exercises, burned with vigor and was a grand success. Posts 34 of Salem and 89 of Beverly arrived at the head quarters of the Post a little after eight and a line was formed, A march was made to the square where Post 90 of Danvers was found in line, a brief halt was made at the hotel to receive special guests and the march resumed to the Peabody Institute. The speakers and officers were soon arrayed upon the platform and a very interesting programme was offered which evidently pleased the assembled audience. Commander W. H. Hildreth of Post 50 opened the exercises with a timely well worded speech of welcome. A stirring address was made by Col. Thomas R. Scott, of Rankin Post 10, Brooklyn, New York, aide-de-camp to the Commander in Chief. During his remarks he paid a strong compliment to the management of Grand Army matters in Massachusetts and Comrade Davis of Post 47 of Haverhill made a very effective speech showing the ludicrous side of army life. Comrades Kenney of Post 90 Danvers and E. C. Spofford of 50, aide-de-camp to the Department Commander, each made brief but appropriate remarks. Commander Lowd, of 34, after modestly declaring his inability to make a speech proceeded to prove his declaration untrue by making a short good one. The surgeon of Post 89 also made excellent remarks, Surgeon Eaton of Danvers, made some very interesting remarks relative to the work of the Woman's Relief Corps. This organization which is being established in various places is giving effective aid to the Grand Army. Mrs. Florence Barker of Malden is the head of the order while Mrs. Turner and Mrs. Fuller of Boston are among the excellent corps of assistants. Comrade Eaton's remarks seemed to meet the approbation of all present, and at their conclusion, Col Scott added his testimony to their good work and said it had the cordial endorsement of the Commander in Chief. Commander O'Connell of Danvers gave a very interesting account of his escape from prison his recapture and subsequent experience. It was a thrilling experience and will probably form part of a work on army life which is shortly to be published in New York and Boston.

The exercises were liberally interspersed with musicwhich formed a much appreciated entertainment and received hearty applause. Charles LeGrande, Chas. Merrill, Mark Heathcote, Geo. Glazier and Geo. A. Goldthwait furnished the vocal portion, assisted by the veteran musician Jacob Young as accompanist. Comrade LeGrande sang several humorous selections which gave great satisfaction and also recited in a commendable manner "The Midnight Review." Comrade Randall of Post 50 read an original rhyme entitled "The old man's first camp-fire." Messrs. Ford and Hammond of Salem gave humorous negroe sketches, which created much merriment. Mr. Charles Downing exhibited much skill in playing the bones and was strongly encored. Mr. Walter S. Lovejoy Danvers' favorite bard, being called up responded with remarks interpersed with original verses including an impromptu versification. At the close of the exercises an adjournment was made to the Post Hall where hard tack, cheese and coffee were found furnished in abundance and of nice quality by Geo. H. Davis. The customary T. D's and tobacco were then produced and amid a cloud of smoke the boys talked over old times until after midnight, when a very successful camp-fire ended.

The numerous accidents which have occurred of late with splitting machines have caused several to exercise their wits to devise means to prevent further similar calamities. Among the different designs, that of Messrs. Noyes & Elligott of this town is worthy of notice. It consists of a draw-roll about the size of the old style, but differing in being hollow in the center with three places to catch instead of two. The leather is drawn by hand as far as is needed and then the neck having been dropped through between two of the sections of the roll, is quickly caught, wound and drawn through. The advantages of this roll are its simplicity, its cheapness, its excellent work and its security against accident; the chance of the latter being reduced to so slight a possiblity as to be practically nothing. Messrs. Geo. Plumer & Co., Danversport, are using the roll and express themselves as much pleased with it. Jos. M. Kearns is operating it at their place and declares it a success. All are cordially invited to witness its working at Messrs. Plumer's at any time. Mr. Noyes the inventor may be found there.

The fair for the benefit of the Firemen's Relief Association opened very favorably at Upton's Hall last evening. Previous to the opening the firemen headed by the Salem Brass Band made a short parade, after which the fair was opened without ceremony. The hall is very tastily decorated by Messrs. Lamprell & Marble of Boston, with flags and bunting. On each of the windows is the American and a foreign flag, making a very pretty display; over the stage is the words "Peabody Firemen's Relief Association," and among the decorations is displayed a hose carriage, steamer, the Mass. Coat of Arms, shields, etc., while over the table of H. & L. 1, there is a fine picture of the late Abel Proctor. Suspended among the draperies in the center of the hall is a large picture of Odd Fellows emblems and on the other side the badge of the Grand Army. The tables are loaded with a large and handsome collection of miscellaneous and fancy articles, which speaks well for the industry and interest of the leaders. Table No. 1, furnished by Hose 1, is under the charge of Mrs. Frank O. Parker. On this table there are among the book prizes, a blue toilet set, toilet slippers, log cabin quilt, sofa pillow, wax doll, and a handsome lamp mat.

Table No. 2, furnished by Hose 2, is in charge of Mrs. J. B. Reith, and contains the following book prizes: parlor lamp, bird and cage, slumber pillow, box of cigars, gent's shoes, toilet set, etc.

Table No. 3, furnished by Steamer 2, is in charge of Mrs. John H. Tibbetts. On this table there is a silver cake basket, three toilet sets, a motto with a picture of Garfield, a Pike's Peak quilt, and a Japanese quilt.

Table No. 4, furnished by Hose 3, is in charge of Mrs. Jessie F. Bassett. The book prizes are a painted toilet set, painted sofa pillow, old woman and children in a shoe, star quilt, bird and cage, Jumbo, and side by side sit the Quaker and the fireman who have always been one at the Torrent house.

Table No. 5, furnished by Hose 4, is in charge of Mrs. John W. Lee. On this table is a morocco dresser's kit, doll No. 1, doll and carriage, loaf cake, wine set, slippers and stockings, full rigged ship, quilt, etc.

Table No. 6, furnished by Hose 5, is in charge of Mrs. W. W. Reed, on which there is a carriage blanket, loaf of wedding cake, silver cake basket, a clock and log cabin quilt. The center of attraction on this table is the fine piece of statuary, representing a goddess bestowing the crown of victory.

Table No. 7, furnished by Abel Procter H. & L. No. 1, is in charge of Mrs. Thomas O. Bartlett. On this table there is a table scarf, a hand painted plate, camp rocker, trunk, etc.

Table No. 8, furnished by Steamer No. 1, is in charge of Mrs. Wm. J. Roome. On this table is a wax doll, wax flower cross, sofa pillow, and a tidy worked by Mr. Geo. Carr the expressman.

Table No, 9, is the prize table, in charge of Mrs. Thomas Noyes. On this table is a china set, silver ice pitcher, accommodation set including 12 pieces, and an ice pitcher and gold watch.

The confectionery table is well supplied by Pepper's best candy and is in charge of Mrs. Wm. H. Hildreth and Mrs. Abbie Robinson.

The refreshment rooms are in charge of Mr. Wm. H. Hildreth, and the hasty pudding tub is looked after by Miss Julia Hinds. Last evening two prizes were drawn, a bouquet of flowers by A. A. Abbott Jr., and twenty-five season tickets by Dennis Griffin.

The entertainment in the Universalist Vestry, under the supervision of Mrs. Geo. O. Pierce and Mr. Amos Merrill can only be expressed by the word "delightful." It was a novel and particularly pleasing performance. It included several finely prepared pieces of statuary, which could not have been improved, besides several tableaux in which dress and other accessories were in thorough keeping. Also a May festival by a group of young girls, which included the crowning of Miss Bessie Randall as Queen, a dance around a May pole and other pretty exercises. The flower-arch scenes were a series of graceful changes by a corps of older misses, dressed in white, each carrying over her head a small arch wreathed with flowers. A noticeable feature was dancing of the minuet by eight young lads and misses dressed in old style—each wearing a wig. The peculiar movements of the young actors and their tout ensemble, made this one of the chief events of the evening. During the presentation of a tableau "Singing the Marseillaise" Mr. Tollson a young Swedish artist, at work upon the church, kindly sang this song. Mr. Tollson has a sweet voice of unusual compass, which he is cultivating with care, and his obliging assistance was duly appreciated by those in charge, and received the cordial applause of the audience. The encomiums upon the entertainment have been so many and so strong, that it will undoubtedly be repeated at an early date.

"G. S." Cigars—all the rage—nothing like them—at George Stevens'.

Oranges, Nuts, and the best fruit of all kinds, at George Sevens'.

This forenoon our town was honored with the visit of a royal party, being no less than the embassy of Queen Ranavalo of Madagascar, consisting of His Excellency Ravoninahitriniarvo and servant, Ramaniraka and servant, Marc Rabibsoa, Moses Andrianisa, A. Sacchi, Colonel W. W. Robinson and W. C. Pickersgill. They arrived in Boston last night, and after visiting Salem, which place they were anxious to see on account of the large trade which formerly was carried on between the coast of Africa and that city. After being received by the firm of Ropes, Emmerton & Co., the successors of the late Capt. Bertram, the first American, it is said, to open trade with the island of Madagascar, they took barouches and escorted by Thomas E. Proctor, Esq., were driven to this town and to the factory of Mr. Proctor. Here they alighted and were shown through the large establishment of Mr. Proctor by that gentlemen in person, and the different processes of tanning and the manufacture of leather explained to the party. They were much interested and expressed great surprise at the wonderful proportions of the business as exemplified in this factory. Considering their short stay in New England, our town as well as Mr. Proctor can but feel pride in being honored with a visit from them.

The graduating exercises of the Holten High school, class of 1883 took place at the Peabody Institute, Danvers, Friday March 23d. A large delegation from the Peabody High School were present, school having been closed an hour earlier to give those who desired a chance to attend. Some of the scholars in the class rank in scholarship higher than any other class since the school first graduated a class nearly thirty years ago, taking a rank of over ninety eight per cent., for the course of three years, some terms ranking ninety nine per cent. The exercises as a whole showed careful training on the part of the teachers and great perseverance on the part of the scholars. Nearly all of the recitations were good and several of them excellent. In one or two instances the pieces were over done but in most of these cases the scholars showed an ability and determination to overcome any obstacles in their way of final success. Many of the essays were of a high literary character and showed a thorough knowledge of the subject under consideration and careful training in the English language. It cannot be expected that when all of a class take part in the graduating exercises that all the parts will be uniformly good, but we think these exercises were such that the citizens of Danvers may well be proud of their High School.

Gov. Butler has appointed Thursday, April 5th, as a day of humiliation, fasting and prayer, and specially exhorts "the ministers of the gospel on that day to feed their flocks with the divine word; and not discourse upon political and other secular topics." His excellency seems to wish it to be understood by the clergy that one eye of the executive is on the state and the other on the church, and that his optics are so constructed that he is enabled to focus both at once. This is probably the reason that His excellency's proclamation was not read in our churches last Sunday. In some of them no notice of it was taken, and in others the simple statement that it had been received was made.

An interesting meeting of the Unity Club was held with Miss Nettie Cook, on Washington street, last Monday evening. Miss Fannie Kittredge gave a talk on Texas in the days before the war, giving in a familiar way an account of her experience in that country in 1859, where she was a teacher for some years. She gave personal reminiscences of the schools, churches, revivals, and manner of life at that time in the South, which proved interesting to the club. A short entertainment consisting of jubilee and other songs followed. It was decided to hold the next meeting at the chapel, and to extend an invitation to the Murray Club to meet with them.

Last Monday evening, a carriage was seen driving across the Square, followed rapidly by a crowd of men and boys determined, if possible, to obstruct its passage. One of the occupants was John L. Sullivan, the noted pugilist, who was the guest of James E. Millea. He was driven to the saloon of the latter gentleman, which was opened to the public on that evening for the first time, and remained until after eight o'clock. The crowd of persons, anxious for a glimpse of this man, was so dense that at one time it was impossible to enter the place. Over one thousand people, it is estimated, visited Mr. Millea's saloon during the evening.

The season ticket prizes of the Firemen's Fair will be drawn at Town Hall on Monday evening, April 2, instead of Tuesday, as announced in the advertisement last week.

A paper is circulating among the members of the Exchange News Room for a new pool table. A good sized amount has already been subscribed.

West Peabody.—The Farmers' Club, on Friday night, March 23, was opened in its usual manner, and the unfinished question of the 16th was again taken up for discussion, viz., Taxation. Mr. Jas. P. King opened the discussion by saying that he had changed his views a little, after having read the new law, which taxed a house assessed for $2000, on which is a $1500 mortgage; the one pays taxes on the mortgage, the other on the $500, and he thought that was just; and did not believe that a house should be taxed for its assessed value and the note also, for that would be double taxation, in his opinion; he thought that the money lender got the best of the transaction anyhow; that if laws were made in regard to taxation, they should be such as would bear most leniently on the poor man. In regard to taxing Government bonds, the speaker argued that as the Government had promised not to tax them, it would cause people to lose confidence in a Governor that would go back on his word of honor. In regard to placing all the tax on real estate, should that be done there would be a greater rebellion than we have yet seen; for the farmers of the country would die rather than submit to such an injustice; the speaker closed with an eloquent plea in behalf of the poll tax, and said that the man must be small indeed, who would try to shirk that burden. Poor men spent a great deal of money for rum, but did not want to pay a poll tax. He did not believe such drunkards ought to have the right to vote. Mr. Spaulding rose and said he wanted to speak right here, and in reply to a remark made by Mr. King, that a poor man who drank should not vote, said that the poor man was not the only party at the bar; if you question the right of the poor man, who drinks, to vote, why not question the right of the rich drunkard also; that there are more of the rich men of the state who shirk their taxes than there are of the poor; should a poor man fail to pay his poll tax a hullabullo is raised from Berkshire to Cape Cod. Taxes should be levied upon property, all property, and there should be no poll tax. Churches also and Church property should be taxed, and all educational establishments outside of those of the State. If you exempt the church because it is said to do good, why not exempt the grist mill; he also said that all property, real and personal, should be taxed once a year, and in whatever place it was at the time. The railroads in Peabody should be taxed in Peabody. Mr. Spaulding here took up the town report, and asked how it was that those persons in the alms house consumed six barrels of flour apiece during the year, and burnt more fuel than any thirty houses in town. Mr. King replied that many poor families outside had been furnished with fuel which was incorporated in that total. Mr. Spaulding then asked, what the $5000 was expended for. Mr. King said he was willing to have that matter inquired into, and that it would be found to be all right. Here the chair ruled the town report out of order. Mr. Needham took the floor and spoke of the large tax paid by West Peabody for those public buildings and water works, which were in the town and far removed from them, and which they could not enjoy; thought it was about time that the town look about some way to liquidate its present debt, before it assumes any more; thought that the abolition of the poll tax would also help to raise the debt instead of decreasing it. Mr. C. H. Fernald then rose and took the opposite view; believed that a graduating income tax would be the only just tax, and none levied on any thing else except on accumulated wealth; since the abolition of the old United States income tax, the wealthy men of the country had been playing a game of battledoor and shuttle cock with this question; real estate trying to put the tax on stocks and other wealth, and vice versa; said also that the poll tax was wrong and showed that it is the poor man who indirectly pays the greatest part of all the taxes. Taking Rhode Island as an illustration, which has a property qualification, a man the night before election who owns a jackass worth $100 and has no other property, has a vote; but if the jackass is taken sick and dies that night, he has then no property, and therefore cannot vote; showing that it was not the man but the jackass who had the vote. In Massachusetts a poor man has to pay two dollars; he has a large family dependent upon his earnings, but he managed to save two dollars to pay his tax; his wife, or one of his children is taken sick, he calls in a doctor, who for a few moments pulse feeling and advice, pockets the two dollars that the poor man has worked hard nearly, if not all day to earn; he finds it hard to again save enough to pay his tax, and cannot vote; therefore it is not the man who votes but the two dollars. Mr. Ingraham followed, and also said that he believed that the poll tax should be abolished; thought that taxing a house and also the note was unjust and tended to inflate values. Hon. N. A. Horton was the next and last speaker; he said he thought he could not instruct this meeting, and was glad to see so much interest manifested on this question; Mr. Spaulding's remarks had awakened a great many thoughts in his mind, for their great depth, and originality. He had once paid taxes under the United States income law, and believed that it was the easiest tax to pay; would not advocate such a tax, but believed that if every one who paid taxes would only make honest returns of their property, it would be the easiest tax to pay. Taking our system as it is, the step taken by the Legislature in 1881 was a step in the wrong direction; being then in the Senate he had spoken to that effect; said in theory that the law looked all right, but practically it was all wrong; believed that there should be a poll tax and would not vote to change the constitution as it now stands; the speaker although frequently interrupted by questions, went on and eulogized Vanderbilt and other wealthy men, as being great public benefactors, and ended with arguments against labor reform in general, and communists in particular. The subject for the next meeting was then announced by the chairman, which was "Fruits." After singing by the chorus club the meeting then adjourned.

Comrade Thomas E. Harris of West Peabody, a member of Union Post 50, G. A. R., died at his home Tuesday afternoon. He was a member of Company D., 50th Massachusetts Regiment. Post 50 will attend his funeral in a body Thursday at half past two o'clock. Post will meet at head-quarters at one o'clock.

So. Peabody.—Mr. John Giles died last Sunday morning with the pneumonia, after an illness of two weeks. His remains were placed in the tomb at Cedar Grove cemetery Tuesday.

Rev. J. W. Colwell attended the funeral of a lady friend in Concord, N. H., last Monday.

Arthur Goodrich, who attends school at Andover, is spending his vacation at home with his parents.

Mrs. M. E. Brown has presented the committee of hose 5 table with a quilt for the fair. It is of log cabin pattern.

Mr. Daniel Haskell has commenced operations on the old chapel; it is his intention to finish it off into a three tenement house.

A large majority of the school children are at home sick with the measles. Miss Pike having only five in her school last Monday.

The family of Mrs. Sarah Larrabee gathered at her house on Lynnfield St., last Saturday night, the occasion being her 80th birthday. She received many valuable presents and a purse of money, and at a late hour the party dispersed to their homes, all hoping to meet again another year.

Revival meetings have been held the past week, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday evenings. So much interest has been developed that a vote was taken to continue the meetings the present week, on the same evenings. Several have risen for prayers.

Penalty for Sin.—March 26, Geo. N. Hayes arrested by officer Jones was fined $5.85 for drunkenness.

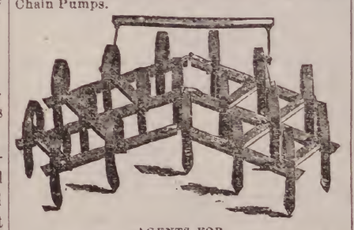
Cornelius Devine and Jas. A. Murphy arrested by officer Barnaby charged with drunkenness were committed and also held in $500 for the Superior Court on the charge of larceny.

27th, Jas. J. Kelley charged with drunkenness was arrested by officer Mack and was fined $5.85.

Patrick McGuire charged with drunkenness was arrested by officer Jones and fined $5.85.

Jacob Bodge, one of oldest and much respected citizens died yesterday morning. He was born in the old town of Danvers, and learned the tanning trade of Squires Shove. He had a small yard in Danvers, and afterwards moved to this part of the town, since which time he has been engaged in market gardening. He leaves four sons, Horatio, Jacob G., William and George, and two daughters, Sally Bodge, and Mrs. Ezra Huntington of Manchester, N. H. He was a strong Universalist and a constant attendant as long as he was able. His funeral takes place to-morrow.

A novel entertainment entitled "Aunt Polly Basset's Singin Skewl" was given in the Unitarian Vestry last evening, to as large a number of auditors as could conveniently be seated. Mrs. S. Quaife taught the school, who were dressed in the costume of "ye olden time" and sang several rounds and choruses in good style. The daughter of Mrs. Quaife personified "darter Belinda" and played the piano. She also sung several humorous songs, displaying qualities that if properly developed would make her a Pixley or a Maggie Mitchell.



A man named Thomas Murphy was arrested this morning on suspicion of stealing money from workmen at the shop of Richardson Doyle & Co. The men had been missing money, handkerchiefs, etc., from their clothes for some time, and suspicion rested on Murphy and as he was about to leave this morning he was arrested.

Captain John Howard, a veteran fireman, died at his residence, 59 Russell street, Charlestown, last Wednesday. He was born in North Square, Boston, June 14, 1809, and during his boyhood worked on a farm. At 14 he drove a four-in-hand from Lowell to Boston, at 18 he became a member of the old hand-engine Hancock No. 1, and at the age of 25 was foreman of No. 4, and was in command in person at the fire at the Nunnery, August 11, 1834. A week later the company disbanded and he became assistant foreman of Hancock No. 1. In 1839 he became foreman of Bunker Hill No. 2, in which capacity he served for fourteen years and resigned in 1853. June 17 the same year the company presented him a large silver pitcher. He afterward served two years as an engineer and has been more or less connected with the department ever since. For the last thirteen years he had served as Superintendent of the Malden Bridge. The deceased was much esteemed, both as a fireman and as a citizen, honest, trustworthy and attentive. His funeral took place last Friday and was attended by more than fifty veteran firemen. His body was interred at Woodland Cemetery. He was well known to many of our older firemen. When the Torrent hand engine was new, he came down with it and at that time predicted it would be the crack machine of the state. A prophecy that has since proved true.

Owing to the reduction of the appropriation for police there will probably have to be a reorganization of that body, and the discontinuing of one of the day police will probably be the result. The Selectmen will consider this business at their session next Saturday and also act on the appointment of a chief of police, a largely signed petition having been presented in favor of the reappointment of Mr. Thomas W. Peasley.

A large number of our musical people attended the performance of the 'Redemption' at Mechanic Hall, Salem, last evening. The combined choruses of the Lowell Choral Society and the Salem Oratorio So. under the direction of Carl Zerrahn, and with the orchestration of the Germania Band, of Boston, is a union of musical forces seldom seen in these parts. Mrs. H. F. Knowles, Miss Dalton, Mrs Fenderson, Mr. Willis Clark, D. W. Babcock and J. W. Leach were the soloists. It was a grand and finished performance, of which the Society may well be proud.

What might have been a serious accident occurred yesterday afternoon at J. E. Clement & Co's machine shop, in the pattern room of Frank C. Ferguson. Mr. Ferguson was running his jig saw, when he noticed it did not run as it should, and found that the belt was slipping. He stepped back for something to push the belt in its place, when it came off the pulley. Ferguson got out of the way, but none too soon. The counter shaft was torn in pieces, ripping up the floor, breaking the pulley and doing considerable damage. It made some excitement for a time.

An invaluable Remedy for Cuts, Burns, Scalds, Sore Lips, Chilblains, Chapped Hands, Salt Rheum, Boils, Corns, Fresh Cuts, Wounds, Inflammation of all kinds, etc., etc.

TESTIMONIALS.

This is to certify that the Plantain Salve, manufactured by Mrs. Wyatt, is a most excellent relief for Burns, Sores, Ulcers of various kinds, Sprains, Enlarged Joints, and Scrofula Swellings, etc.

P. M. CHASE, M. D.,
Danvers, Mass.

This certifies that I fully concur in the above testimony relating to Mrs. Wyatt's Plantain Salve, and consider it an excellent remedy.

D. A. GROSVENOR, M. D.,
Danvers, Mass.

This is to certify that I had a Bunion on my foot for five years, and it became a running sore. I used every kind of Salve that I could hear of and could not heal it. Last fall I commenced using Mrs. Wyatt's Plantain Salve, and it is now as well as it ever was. I thought it my duty to make it known to the public, so that others may use it.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

FITS A Leading London Physician establishes an office in New York for the cure of EPILEPTIC FITS. From Am. Journal of Medicine.

Dr. Ab. Meserole (late of London), who makes a specialty of Epilepsy, has without doubt treated and cured more cases than any other living physician. His success has simply been astonishing; we have heard of cases of over 20 years' standing successfully cured by him. He has published a work on this disease, which he sends with a large bottle of his wonderful cure free to any sufferer who may send their express and P. O. Address. We advise any one wishing a cure to address Dr. AB. MESEROLE, No. 96 John St., New York.

A Perfect Combination with two Salient Advantages—Why it Concerns You.

"There is no mistake about it," remarked Dr. M. F. Flowers, of Gallatin, Missouri, "BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS are one of the neatest combinations ever produced. They have two kinds of advantages over all others, which we may call the minor and the major.—First, they are clean and pleasant to use, never soiling the hands nor the linen of the wearer.—Second, they act quickly and powerfully. I have tried the Capcine Plaster on myself for pneumonia, and on my patients for various diseases, such as Neuralgia, Muscular Rheumatism, Lumbago, Kidney Trouble, etc., and in all cases relief has followed in from three to forty-eight hours.

Dr. Flower merely voices the written or oral opinion of thousands in his profession. BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS are the perfect external application. The genuine have the word CAPCINE cut in the centre. Price 25 c. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York.

The Boston, Revere Beach & Lynn Railroad Company are planning for an increased business the coming summer. They will run trains half-hourly, and afford better accommodations than were supplied last year, with more frequent trains. The managers of the road are wide-awake and progressive, and nothing will be left undone which the convenience of their patrons requires.

If you desire a first class barrel of family flour, call on L. F. Moulton & Co., 26 Central street.

TO PLEASE HER HUSDAND

Were the words of a Good Lady, Mrs. Hawkins, who has long suffered from the pain common to Chronic Rheumatism. A Woman's Patience and Fortitude Well Shown.

Your reporter found Mrs. Hawkins at 14 Exchange St., New Haven, Conn. "About four years ago," she said, "I was then a resident of Brooklyn, N. Y. I went over one morning to the Jersey City depot to see some friends off who were starting for the west.—There was a strong draft of air in the depot, and in standing by the train talking to my friends I caught a severe cold. I had no more than reached my home again when I was taken with a sudden chill and then fever set in. The outcome of all was that rheumatism settled all over me. I was entirely helpless. From this I have never recovered.—You see my hands what a state they are in. Those are all chalky swellings and my limbs are very bad. While I remained in Brooklyn I tried all sorts of remedies, but I could never gain any relief. My physician said it was no use. I grew very thin and lost all strength. Finally, after coming here, to gratify my husband, I began to take Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY, and my general health has been better than ever before I am stronger, have an excellent appetite, which I did not have for a long time. It has helped my rheumatism, and with a thorough trial I am in hopes of recovering completely."

Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY has been successfully used by thousands. It will build up a system that has been run down by overwork. It is the thing for the student and literary man to have at hand, and should be in the home of every mechanic. FAVORITE REMEDY is economical, safe and pleasant. Buy it and try it.

KEEP YOUR SCALP CLEAN.
The best thing out for removing Dandruff is
HEYLINGBERG'S
EUREKA DANDRUFF REMOVER.

It has been thoroughly tested by hundreds of gentlemen, Ladies, and Children, and we have plenty of testimonials of its good results. It is cooling, removes Dandruff, invigorates the roots of the hair, and will quickly produce a strong and beautiful growth in all cases where the roots of the hair are not fully dead, and will stop this unpleasant itching; in fact it is the best hair dressing in use. It is not greasy or sticky, and is warranted free of all oils, and poisins, and will prove the cleanest, safest and most economical Hair Dressing to be found.

Peabody, Mass., Nov. 18, 1881.

Mr. J. J. Heylingberg. Dear Sir:—Both myself and wife have used your Eureka Dandruff Remover for some time, with the most satisfactory results, and recommend it as being indispensable for the toilet. Yours truly,
FRANK A. BRAGDON.

Many more testimonials furnished if desired.

Persons suffering from diseases of the scalp will be attended at the house when desired.

ONE FOOL AMONG MANY.

WRECKED BY HIS UNTEMPERED AMBITION.—A LIGHTHOUSE ON THE SHOALS.

"I ought to have stopped five years before I did; but I thought it wouldn't amount to anything, so I kept on. I was a fool, of course—but who isn't, when ambition and the chance of making money spurs him on? I only hope I shall get well enough to digest another square meal sometime without a rebellion in my stomach."

The speaker was one of the best known civil engineers and mining experts in this country; hardy by nature as a buffalo, but broken down by hard study and the merciless lashing administered to his mind and body by his own hand during the earlier part of his career. At fifty he is prematurely gray, bent in form and dispirited. Dyspepsia did it—Dyspepsia, the self-inflicted curse of the American in every department of toil.

"I am thirty five years old," writes Mr. Charles H. Watts, of West Somers, Putnam County, N. Y., "and had suffered from dyspepsia for fifteen years. Tried everything—At last gave PARKER'S GINGER TONIC a chance to show what it could do for me. It proved its ability by curing me. I recommend it to all who are suffering from this terrible desease." Mr. G. R. Cole, druggist, of Carmel, N. Y., certifies to the truth of Mr. Watts' statement.

Gloom, despondency, hopelessness, disgust with all labor, sleeplessness, horrid dreams to render bed-time like the hour of execution to a criminal—these are some of Dyspepsia's foot-prints. The Dyspeptic knows what Coleridge meant when he said: "Night is my hell." PARKER'S GINGER TONIC cures Dyspepsia, purifies the Blood, disperses Rheumatism and all chronic ailments. Prices, 50 cents and $1 a bottle. HISCOX & Co., New York.

Miscellaneous.

CRUEL CHARITY.—Chicago contributes a systematic cruelty to children that will do to class in the Shepherd Crowley category, if the half is true. There is, of course, an allowance always to be made "In startling revelations" made by the general public and not by some legally constituted authority; but in this case there is evidently good ground for an investigation at least. It appears that two little girls, ages 11 and 9, were living with a woman keeping a house of bad repute, and the Illinois humane society sent an officer to look the matter up. The report proved true, and in order to force the mother, who lived elsewhere in the city, to place her children under better influence, threats were made that the house would "be 'pulled.'" The children were then sent to the "convent of the servile sisters of Mary," a Catholic institution in the outskirts of Chicago. After six weeks had passed the officer received complaints of cruelty on the part of the sisters, and he found the children in such a condition that he took them away, his responsibility in the matter, however, evidently making him cautious about committing himself. He found the engine-house had been flooded and the furnace put out; one of the children had swollen feet caused by the cold, and so he took the children to his home and had them taken care of.

The story of the girls themselves is that the feet of all the children were wet during the flood, and their shoes and srockings were taken from them during the night, but were not replaced by dry ones. At 5 in the morning they were forced to walk over the ice to the mess-room barefooted, and thence to the chapel, where their cries greatly disturbed the priest. Their stockings were not returned until the day following, but their feet had become swollen, and those who did not put their shoes on were condemned to have them hung round their necks, besides being flogged with a strap on their bare legs, while some were beaten with a "flat stick." The children slept in rooms under the roof. The beds were good enough, but the snow came through the unfinished roof, which kept the floors covered with water. The older girls in the morning are made to sew, while the younger ones are led into a corridor where they pray to the pictures on the walls, one after another. If they talk to each other the strap is again brought into use. Other details are given too revolting to print, and as to the food a general complaint is made that it is not sufficient or good, several of the children, whose names are given, having ring-worms on their faces.

The priest and also Archbishop Feehan, when interviewed, expressed considerable surprise and more ignorance concerning the alleged condition of the institution, but admit that there is no regular system of inspection, the sisters having everything their own way, although they are subject to the authority of the Catholic church. Whatever may be the facts in the case, it will serve to emphasize one thing in the treatment of children at Chicago, as well as elsewhere. The courts place these children in the hands of a humane society. This society distributes them among charitable societies over which they have no control. The charitable societies make their report to the church and the humane society reports to the court. By this arrangement the poor children must suffer. In many of the states there is such poor provision for children that the judges are only too glad to hand them over to anybody who will take them. Few states or municipalities have even begun in the work in behalf of children which is so notable and successful a feature of the state charities of Massachusetts.—Springfield Republican.

"The Hindoo widow," chants the Boston Transcript, "is the only one that cremates. The others remate." A lady afflicted with a nauseating case of catarrh, whether she is single or married, probably longs for cremation (of the disease, if not of her person). The sickening, revolting breath, foul discharges, racking pains and other characteristics of Catarrh, render life a burden. Ely's Cream Balm is a reliable, fragrant yet certain cure for all such cases. This balm is not a liquid or snuff, and is easily applied. "My head and throat ached so severely, from Catarrh," said Major Downs, Military Instructor, Mt. Pleasant Academy, Sing Sing, N. Y., "that I am obliged to give up everything and keep quiet. Ely's Cream Balm cured me." This exquisite preparation will cure any case of Catarrh. 50 cents.

The April number of the Season is on our table. This magazine of fashion is one of the most elaborate of any in the country. Scars prevented.
Dysentery cured.
Wounds healed rapidly.
Scurvy cured.
An Antidote for Animal or Vegetable Poisons, Stings, etc.

I used the Fluid during our present affliction with Scarlet Fever with decided advantage. It is indispensable to the sick-room.—WM. F. SANDFORD, Eyrie, Ala.

Scarlet Fever Cured.

Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn.
I testify to the most excellent qualities of Prof. Darbys Prophylactic Fluid. As a disinfectant and detergent it is both theoretically and practically superior to any preparation with which I am acquainted.—N. T. LUPTON, Prof. Chemistry.

Darbys Fluid is Recommended by
Hon. ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS, of Georgia;
Rev. CHAS. F. DEEMS, D.D., Church of the Strangers, N. Y.;
Jos. LECONTE, Columbia, Prof., University, S.C.
Rev. A. J. BATTLE, Prof., Mercer University;
Rev. GEO. F. PIERCE, Bishop M. E. Church.

INDISPENSABLE TO EVERY HOME.
Perfectly harmless. Used internally or externally for Man or Beast.
The Fluid has been thoroughly tested, and we have abundant evidence that it has done everything here claimed. For fuller information get of your Druggist a pamphlet or send to the proprietors,

J. H. ZEILIN & CO.,
Manufacturing Chemists, PHILADELPHIA.

SMALL-POX and PITTING of Small Pox PREVENTED

A member of my family was taken with Small-pox. I used the Fluid; the patient was not delirious, was not pitted, and was about the house again in three weeks, and no others had it.—J. W. PARKINSON, Philadelphia.

Diphtheria Prevented.

The physicians here use Darbys Fluid very successfully in the treatment of Diphtheria.
A. STOLLENWERCK,
Greensboro, Ala.

Tetter dried up.
Cholera prevented.
Ulcers purified and healed.
In cases of Death it should be used about the corpse—it will prevent any unpleasant smell.
The eminent Physician, J. MARION SIMS, M. D., New York, says: "I am convinced Prof. Darbys Prophylactic Fluid is a valuable disinfectant."

SHAKER LINIMENT.

Shaker Liniment CURES

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Inflammations, Lame Back, Enlarged Glands, Toothache, Croup, Sprains, Chronic Diseases of the Joints and Muscles, Bruises, Gout, Quinsy, Sore Throat, Swellings. Frosted Feet, Chilblains, and all Diseases of an Inflammatory Nature.

Recommended by Physicians.

Dr. W. C. Sylvester says: "I have examined the formula of the Shaker Liniment, and I use it in my family and recommend it to all sufferers from Neuralgia and Rheumatism. It is better than any other liniment."

A. Hanson, Boston Wire Works, 75 to 81 Cornhill, says: "My wife was cured of Neuralgia.—Four applications cured me of Rheumatism, and Mr. Lord, my neighbor, who has been on crutches fifteen years, obtained relief from less than one bottle of the Shaker Liniment."

Chas. Prescott, Merchant, Randolph, says: "Send me three dozen Shaker Liniment. My customers have confidence in it, and I can consistently recommend it."

Dr. U. K. Mayo, 378 Tremont street, says: "It is the most effective remedy that ever came to my notice, and I cheerfully recommend it."

An Old Nurse says: "If the directions are followed, not one case of croup in a thousand will prove fatal."

J. F. Sawtell, 121 Cambridge street, was cured of Rheumatism, and says: "The Shaker Liniment cured me, and I would advise Rheumatics to use it."

The Boston Traveller says: "Such cures (Mr. Sawtell's) place The Shaker Liniment at the head of all Rheumatic remedies."

Mrs. C. A. Sylvester of the Sawin Academy Sherborn, who was cured of Neuralgia of the heart, says: "Its effects are almost magical. I will cheerfully recommend it to my friends."

E. N. Cummings, the well known Sunday-school worker, formerly of Woburn, now of the firm of Welsh & Cummings, Lynn, says: "The Shaker Liniment cured my wife of an Enlarged Joint, and myself of Acute Inflammation."

C. H. Lewis, Framingham, says: "It gave me quick relief for Rheumatism, and it is the best liniment that I ever used."

Hon. A. Maynard, the extensive manufacturer and founder of the town of Maynard, Mass., who was cured of Neuralgia, says: "By the use of the Shaker Liniment I obtained almost immediate relief and unhesitatingly recommend it to my friends."

L. H. Allen, Station Agent at Rockbottom, says: "I rebelved decided benefit from the Shaker Liniment for Rheumatism, and I have not heard of a case of Neuralgia or Rheumatism that it has not benefitted."

L. J. Jefts, the well known manufacturer of Hudson and Boston, says: "I have seen such proofs of the efficacy of the Shaker Liniment for Neuralgia that I heartily recommend it."

J. E. Bruarton, Manager of the "Golden Rule," says: "The Shaker Liniment gave me immediate relief. It is a wonderful remedy."

HEAD OF CENTRAL.

Thursday evening March 29th will be a great event at Frank Cousins' Bee Hive—when it is expected his new store will be opened to the public. Mr. Cousins has made preparations to welcome on a grand scale his many friends —and they are very numerous. The Salem Cadet Band will furnish music, an extra train will run to Marblehead at the close, and free tickets furnished to the patrons of the Bee Hive. No goods will be sold that evening, the object of the opening being to afford his friends an opportunity to see the improvements, and become acquainted with the enlarged facilities for trade which he will have in his new and remodeled emporium.

The fast day proclamation of Gov. Butler instructs the clergymen as to their duty, but fails to say anything in regard to the bounden duty of every lady to make her spring purchases at Peabody's. It may be wise in the Governor to leave this to the heads of the households, for they are sure to insist that their wives and daughters shall trade where they can get the most for their money, and that's only another way of saying "trade at Peabody's."—Salem Register.

Dramatic and Musical.

Last week witnessed the return at the Boston Theatre of the regular company, and the play of £50,000, long in preparation was added to the wonderful list of successes at this theatre. "£50,000, a Story of Pluck," is the work of those ingenious and facile writers, Mr. Henry Pettitt and Mr. Augustus Harris. In London, under the title of "Pluck," the piece enjoyed a most prosperous career, and it has also enjoyed great favor throughout the English provinces. The story is intricate. The plot hinges on a bequest of £50,000 to a lady, with the proviso (to avoid expensive litigation) that it must be paid within a year from the time of devising, or it will be forfeited. There are six tableaux. In the first the happy pair of lovers are presented to view, all unsuspicious of the trouble in store for them. On the very day of their marriage the machinations of evil-minded plotters begin to hedge them about, and the highest order of courage and "clear grit" alone enable the persecuted to withstand adversity fast following on trouble. One of the specially fine effects of the piece is a Realistic Railway Disaster and collision, in the third tableau. "Locked in the Safe," and "The City Panic" are the events chronicled in successive acts; while in the representation of a great snowstorm and a large conflagration every realistic effect known to the scenic art will be employed. The cast includes William Redmund and the well known members of the company. The play is now running smoothly and every tableau is greeted with the greatest enthusiasm. It is doubtless destined for a long run at this theatre.

Esmeralda at Mechanic Hall last Wednesday evening, was a finished performance and worthy of a larger attendance. The scenery was new and was in pleasing contrast to the monotonous scenery of Mechanic Hall, and the acting was equal to the well deserved reputation of that theatre.

Last Monday as Moses Page, an earthen ware manufacturer was driving down Central street with a large load of ware his horse became frightened on the railroad track and jumped, breaking the team and throwing off a large basket of ware which was demolished.

G. M. Fassett the depot master is confined to the house by sickness.

It is expected that workmen will begin to plaster the new town hall next Monday.

One of the most daring attempts at thieving was brought to the attention of the police this week. Last Sunday persons entered the old Jacobs factory in the rear of Wm. P. Clark's and occupied by Wm. Sutton Jr., and cut down and prepared for removal, about sixty feet of lead pipe. The police laid in wait for them and after dark two men made their appearance with a wheelbarrow, and were immediately arrested. They proved to be the well known "Monkey Murphy," who has a criminal record of unusual length, and the other was another of the same stamp, named Cornelius Devine.

The members of the Unity Club propose giving a complimentary benefit to Mr. Horace G. Wheeler in a few weeks. It will be given in the Peabody Institute, and the many friends of Mr. Wheeler, both in Peabody and Salem, will without doubt cordially co-operate with the committee in making the benefit a grand success. Mr. Wheeler is studying hard to fit himself for the stage, and has been very successful in his representations. Full particulars will be given in our next issue.

Dole & Osgood shipped to Sidney, New South Wales last Friday, six wagons, one extension top jump seat, two piano box buggies, one Boston phaeton, one Corning open buggy, one Corning top buggy, and a very nice road wagon.

William R. Weeks announces this week a special sale of Black Silks. Mr. Weeks already has the reputation of being one of the best judges of these goods in the city of Salem, and his judgment as to their quality can always be relied upon; and when he announces a superior black silk at $1.00 per yard, it will pay our readers to look at it.

J. G. Lowery, No. 116 Washington street, next to the new Post Office in Salem, has an elegant line of frames and artists' materials. This latter has been added in response to the demand for these materials, and Mr. Lowery's assortment of these goods is second to none in this vicinity. It will pay our readers to call at his store and see for themselves.

David Conrad has kindly sent us a pair of his beautiful Mosquitaire Kid Gloves, imported expressly for him. They are of six button length, and will be all the rage this season. Mr. Conrad's facilities for the sale of Kid Gloves are the best, and his show of Gloves in the window is worth going to Salem to see.

Mr. Harry W. French's illustrated lecture on Syria and Egypt, last Thursday evening, was one of the best of the series, and exceedingly interesting and brilliant among the views were glimpses of Constantinople from the Golden Horn, along the Coast of Syria, an excursion up the Nile, and a glimpse of the Dark Continent. Some of the effects are wonderful and of surpassing beauty, while the graphic descriptions and spicy comments kept the attention of the audience riveted on the speaker. The next lecture, and last but one of the series, will be on Thursday evening of this week; subject—Beneath the Himalayas, and the sacred Ganges from the sea to its source.

COUNTY COMM'RS' NOTICE.

Peabody, March 19th, 1883.

To the Honorable Board of County Commissioners for the County of Essex.

The undersigned respectfully represent, that the public convenience and necessity require that that part of Washington street in Peabody between the northwesterly corner of the estate of Stephen Blaney and the dwelling house belonging to Mrs. Franklin Osborne, Jr., should be widened; also that Lynn street should be widened and straightened, at a point some distance southerly of the dwelling house of Samuel K. THE Adjustable Spring Sash-Balance.

PATENTED JULY 16, 1878.

With this device Windows are balanced without the use of weights and cords, and therefore no long boxes on each side of the sash are required. The adjustment to each window according to the weight of its sash and glass by tightening or loosening of its spring is very simple. It is always easy of access to take out for any desirable adjustment, and is applicable to

ANY KIND OF WINDOWS, WHETHER NEW OR OLD STYLE,

Assisting in the opening and holding them at any point to which the lower sash may be raised, or the upper lowered, for the purpose of ventilation and comfort. The general testimony of those whose houses have been supplied with these fixtures for three years is that they are a great convenience, and SATISFACTION IS WARRANTED.

Sold, and if required, applied to windows by

WILMOT'S CLOTHING HOUSE.

WHAT?

1000 Watches and Chains, besides Roller Skates and Bats and Balls

TO BE GIVEN AWAY AT WILMOT'S?

JUST SO!

It is good news to both young and old, but we mean it, every word. We take this method of introducing our enormous and magnificent stock of

SPRING AND SUMMER CLOTHING

in our Men's and Boy's Department to the public, and wish it distinctly understood that the prices on our goods remain the same in every respect, and that what we give you we give you as a free gift.

READ WHAT THE INDUCEMENTS ARE:

From this date we shall give in both our Men's and Boys' Ready-Made departments, to every purchaser of a Suit of Clothes of the value of $10.00, or above,

A GENUINE NICKEL SILVER WATCH,

New Style, Stem-Winder, to wear with the suit, warranted a perfect time keeper; and a Silver Nickel Watch Chain and Charm, the whole valued at Six Dollars ($6.00). Or, if the purchasers prefer, we will give them a handsome Nickel Clock.

The above gift applies to both the Men's and Boys' Departments, but we shall offer some other special inducement for the Boys who buy a less amount.

ATTENTION, BOYS!

Besides the Watch, Charm, etc., which we give if you buy a $10.00 suit, we shall also give to every purchaser of an $8 suit,

A Splendid Pair of ROLLER SKATES valued at $3.00.

And to every Boy purchasing $5.00 worth of Clothing, we will give a BAT and BALL, valued at $1.50.

☞ Remember, that we have the largest and best selected Stock in Essex County, and that we guarantee our prices way below them all.

Come One, Come All,

Both Men and Boys, and get one of these Splendid Watches and Chains, or a Clock. The Goods will not cost you as much as at other places, and you have an enormous stock to select from.

Everything Marked in Plain Figures.

STRICTLY ONE PRICE.

Open Every Evening except Thursday.

Mme. Janauschek closed a brief but highly successful engagement last Saturday evening at the Park Theatre. This week Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Florence are to play an engagement, in the "Mighty Dollar," for this week only. Next week Aldrich & Parsloe are to appear in "My Partner," as played by them all over the Globe.

Eastertide brought, as was to be expected, a great throng to the Boston Theatre, and the performances of the great sensational drama, "£50,000, a Story of Pluck," are applauded by very large audiences. The play, with its intricate stage effects, its beautiful scenery and its strong situations, now moves with such celerity that the curtain falls on the triumph of virtue at a very seasonable hour. The perfection of scenic device, "£50,000," is also acted with great spirit, and the success won in London is likely to be more than repeated here in Boston.

This is the closing week of the Boston Ideal Opera Co. at the Globe. The closing performance of the engagement on Saturday evening will be for the benefit of Miss E. H. Ober, to whose energy and good judgment so much of the success which the Ideals have won is to be attributed. The Boston Globe wittily remarks: "A new opera by W. S. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan, authors of 'Iolanthe,' will be brought out on this occasion. It is entitled 'H. M. S. Pinafore; or, the Lass that Loved a Sailor.' Hardly ever has an opera been awaited with more eagerness." Next week Monte Cristo with a great cast is to be brought out at this theatre.

Iolanthe at the Bijou is the constant attraction. Many of our readers who have seen it in Salem are greatly interested to see it in its perfectness at this theatre, and surely nothing can equal the thoroughness of detail, and attention to all the points which go to make up a faultless performance at this theatre. Its last days are approaching, as a new opera "Pounce & Co." is announced for early presentation.

The Salem Schubert Club will give Hoffman's "Melusina" at Plummer Hall, April 24. Mr. and Mrs. George Henschel and Miss Mary Howe will sing, Mr. and Mrs. Henschel together for the first time in Salem.

The advance demand for tickets in the various towns which Margaret Mather is to visit during the next week indicates that the young star will be greeted everywhere by crowded audiences. She appears in Salem April 19th, under the management of Moulton & Johnson.

Estelle Clayton took Agnes Booth's place in the cast of "Young Mrs. Winthrop" at the Madison Square the other night, the latter lady being ill, and her performance was well received.

Palmer & Ulmer's company in the play of "49," made their second appearance at Mechanic Hall last Friday evening. The company is a strong one, and the performance was far in advance of many shows that come to Salem. Souvenir programmes, containing a portrait of Lizzie May Ulmer, were given to each lady.

Next Tuesday evening the Boston Museum Company will appear in Salem, in "School for Scandal." The cast will include Mr. Warren, Mrs. Vincent, Annie Clarke and Charles Barron. If Mr. Warren should retire permanently from the stage this year, it will be his final performance, undoubtedly, in Salem. The School for Scandal is not as popular a play as might have been brought out, but it shows the entire company to good advantage.

It is safe to say that everybody with their sisters and cousins and aunts will visit the great Equine show in Salem during the present week. There is a matinee to-morrow (Fast) afternoon besides a special programme at 10 A. M., another one Saturday, and performances every evening. If our readers desire good seats our advice to them is to look out in advance. In Boston the rush was so great that they were sold 14 days in advance. The horses will walk up the stairs to the hall previous to every performance.

On account of the Equine Paradox the closing lecture of French's course, "Across the Continent" is postponed until Wednesday evening next, April 11th.

To come — April 13, Barlow & Wilson's Minstrels; April 16, M. B. Leavitt's Gigantean Minstrels; April 19, Margaret Mather; April 30th, John T. Raymond in Paradise.

The Langtry Combination is announced on the New England circuit. "What a fall was there!"

MESSRS. EDITORS:—I notice in the report of last week's legislative proceedings, that a bill was reported by the committee on taxation, for the repeal of the present law in relation to the taxation of mortgaged real estate. To one not a member of the committee, this action seems incomprehensible. In the face of the weight of evidence, and disregarding the principles of just legislation, this committee, who should guard especially the interests of the debtor class, deliberately and almost unanimously vote to do all in their power to restore the burdens of the old law, under which a man was taxed on what he did not own. When we consider that under the old law a large amount of property invested in mortgages escaped taxation, by "dodging," which under the present law is forced to pay a tax, by a reduction in the rate of interest, which it receives, it is not difficult to understand the pressure to which the committee have been subjected. Under the present law, what the lender pays as a tax goes into the pocket of the borrower in the way of a lessened rate of interest. The main argument of the repealers that under the present law the taxable valuation is reduced, will become less forcible each year, as people realize that they can build a house and be taxed only on their interest in it; and even if the fractional increase in the rate of taxation were to be permanent, it were better so than that the evil of double taxation should exist, and injustice be done to so large a part of the community. The other argument that the holder of an equity receives public protection on the full value of the property is not sufficient to convince men in this practical age, that they should pay a tax on fictitious property. It is to be hoped that the majority of the legislature will be with the one dissenting member of the committee, who, I am proud to say, is an Essex county man, and that we may continue to enjoy the benefits of the present law, trusting that a better understanding of its workings will prevent a recurrence of the movement for its repeal. JAS. P. KING.

The Post-office department will soon issue a circular, in view of the reduction of letter postage which takes effect October 1, calling the attention of Postmasters and the public generally to the fact, and admonishing the former to cut down the stock of stamps kept on hand. No steps have yet been taken toward the issuing of a new stamp other than that the head of Washington, which now ornaments the three-cent stamp, will be printed upon the new two-cent issues. The color and design for the stamp have not yet been determined, but will be ere long, so that in the intervening six months everything may be made ready for the change. In the Department it is generally believed that a design similar to the new five-cent issue or "Garfield stamp," will be chosen. General Hazen, Third Assistant Postmaster General, says there will be "no five-cent nickle business" about it. The design will not be approved until it is carefully considered and criticised.

PENALTY FOR SIN.—March 28. Thomas J. Murphy, for non-support of family, was sent for three months to the house of correction.

30. John Connors, for assault on Timothy Keefe, was held in $100 bail for his appearance at the Superior Court.

April 2. Geo. William, of Danvers, for drunkenness, fined $5.85, and not having the amount he was sent to Salem jail.

3. Wm. Allen of Taunton for drunkenness, fined $5.85; not being flush, he was sent to Salem jail.

Jas. Conroy, for drunkenness, was fined $5.85.

An announcement that Almy, Bigelow & Webber have opened their spring goods, is sufficient to cause a flutter in the hearts of our lady readers and the many patrons of this establishment. But so it is. And for the next few weeks we expect to see unusual crowds en route to that store, looking at the latest novelties to be found there.

Hewitt's next week, and the number of tickets will be limited to the capacity of the chapel. It is to be hoped that there will be no vacant seats on the occasion.

Poet's Corner.

A Love-Letter.

BY OWEN MEREDITH.

My love—my chosen—but not mine! I send
My whole heart to thee in these words I write;
So let the blotted lines, my soul's sole friend,
Lie upon thine, and there be blest at night.

Irene, I have loved you, as men love
Light, music, odor, beauty, love itself—
Whatever is apart from and above
Those daily needs which deal with dust and pelf.

And I have been content, without one thought
Our guardian angels could have blushed to know,
So to have lived, and died, demanding naught
Save living, dying, to have loved you so.

My wildest wish was vassal to thy will:
My haughtiest hope a pensioner on thy smile,
Which did with light my barren being fill,
As moonlight glorifies some desert isle.

And so I write to you; and write and write,
For the mere sake of writing to you, dear.
What can I tell you, that you know not? Night
Is deepening through the rosy atmosphere,

About the lonely casement of this room,
Which you have left familiar with the grace
That grows where you have been. And on the gloom
I almost fancy I can see your face.

Perchance I shall not ever see again
That face, I know that I shall never see
Its radiant beauty as I saw it then,—
Save by this lonely lamp of memory—

With childhood's starry graces lingering yet
In the rosy orient of young womanhood;
And eyes like woodland violets newly wet;
And lips that left their meaning in my blood!

Men cannot make, but may ennoble, fate,
By nobly bearing it. So let us trust
Not to ourselves, but God, and calmly wait
Love's orient out of darkness and of dust.

Farewell, and yet again farewell, and yet
Never farewell—if farewell means to fare
Alone and disunited. Love hath set
Our days in music, to the self-same air;

And I shall feel, wherever we may be,
Even though in absence, and an alien clime,
The shadow of the sunniness of thee,
Hovering, in patience, through a clouded time.

Farewell! the dawn is rising, and the light
Is making, in the east, a faint endeavor
To illuminate the mountain peaks. Good-night!
Thine own, and only thine, my love, forever.

Live it Down.

REV. EDWARD O. FLAGG.

Has a foolish word been spoken,
Or an evil deed been done;
Has the heart been almost broken
For the friends that now disown?
Let not coldness or the frown
Skake thy manhood—live it down.

Is the stern traducer sneering
Trusting innuendo vile;
With the world's opinion veering,
Basking in its fickle smile?
What are gossips with their frown?
Buzzing insects—live it down.

Verdict fairer will be given
In the sober after-thought;
Charity, sweet child of heaven.
Judgment harsh will set at naught,
Then will grieved mercy's frown
Smite the sland'rer—live it down.

But if man refuse to soften
For that weakness he may feel,
There is One forgives as often
As to him we choose to kneel.
Droop not then if all should frown;
With such friendship—live it down.

The Husband to his Wife.

If I should die before you, love,
I pray you do not keep
Your woe beyond the first few tears
The world will have you weep;
But say "I make his heaven less
By moaning thus in dearness."

And plant my violets, white and blue,
Above my place of rest,
And tend them with those dear, kind hands
I have so oft caressed.
And say, "These flowers were his last will,
And for his sake I watch them still."

And when the spring that I so loved
Shall flush the land with life,
I pray you seek my quiet grave,
But not with tears, sweet wife;
And if the flowers in bloom shall be,
Say, "Lo! he sends his love to me."

'Do you see that handsome man with the iron-gray hair?'

'Number ninety-one?'

'Yes. He is serving a term of twenty years for counterfeiting. He is one of the slickest confidence men alive, and he has operated all over the world.'

'I would like to talk with him.'

'I'll send him to the office, and you can converse with him at your leisure.'

* * * * * *

Where I was born, is not material, and the name of Henry Fontin, which I bear here is as good for the purpose of my story, as the name by which my mother called me when I came to this place.

I was educated at a German Gymnasium, and at twenty-two went to study journalism at the University. There I applied myself for a year or two closely to my studies, but dissipation led to play, and proved my ruin.

Before the expiration of my second year, I was domiciled at Baden-Baden, and the gaming table was my constant resort, gambling my sole occupation and pleasure.

I was very successful, and led an easy, reckless life for ten years, when an unfortunate occurrence or rather an unlucky discovery of certain of my irregularities, drove me temporarily from the continent, and in the autumn of 1871, I found myself in the vast, and to me, strange city of London.

I had brought with me from Paris quite a little fortune in money, but ill-luck at play and my customary extravagance had speedily reduced it to less than one hundred pounds, which to a man of my luxurious habits was a mere bagatelle. As soon, however, as I realized the low state of my finances I set about devising some plan for their improvemement.

For once, however, my wits seemed to have deserted me. Many trifling matters out of which a few pounds might be realized suggested themselves, all of which I promptly rejected, as no scheme of any magnitude came to my relief.

One morning, as I was drinking my coffee and reading the literary notes in the Times, I saw an announcement that William Mason, a retired merchant, and a prominent member of the Cobden Club, was engaged in writing a work on political economy, with original tables of statistics, that were soon to be issued in fine form by the well-known publishing house of Williams & Abercrombie, in Holborn street.

Thousands in that great city doubtless read the announcement, and forgot it as a matter of little interest or moment, but to me it was an inspiration, suggesting the possibility of a great fortune.

An hour later I had learned that William Mason was a man widely and favorably known throughout England, both by reason of his immense wealth and as being the author of two or three successful books.

That evening I called upon Mr. Mason at his residence, introducing myself as a French gentleman, deeply interested in his favorite study, political economy, and had no difficulty in obtaining an interview.

Well informed as I was on all the current topics of the day, and understanding particularly well the question of protective tariff from the free-trade standpoint, I made a very favorable impression on Mr. Mason, who with the simplicity of a man of real genius, took me largely into his confidence, and explained to me the aims and scope of his work that day announced for publication. An hour was thus pleasantly, and to me profitably passed; and when, at the expiration of that time, I arose to go, I was most cordially invited to call again at my convenience and renew the conversation.

I was jubilant that morning as I walked rapidly to my lodgings to perfect my plans. My visit had been a success. I now knew Mr. Mason, and what was of far greater importance to me, had learned incidentally that he had no acquaintance with Robert Fairchild, the wealthy banker and learned statistician of Liverpool, and had never corresponded with him.

That night I wrote Robert Fairchild over the signature of William Mason, apologizing for intruding on one known to me only by reason of his national reputation, suggesting that I had an elaborate work almost ready for the publishers, and requesting some information as to the number and nationality of emigrants who had sailed from Liverpool for the United States and British Colonies during each year of the last decade. I concluded my letter by assuring him that I would gladly credit him in my forthcoming work with any information on the subject that he would be so kind as to impart.

Three days later, I found in my box at the post office a long letter from Mr. Fairchild, containing all the information I had asked for and more besides. He was very profuse in his compliments; the name of William Mason was entirely familiar to all thinking men in Great Britain, and I needed no introduction to him. He concluded by saying: "You are one of the few men of wealth who have ever labored with brain and pen for the benefit of mankind."

Upon the receipt of this letter, which pleased me exceedingly, I set about putting into execution my already perfected plans. I called upon a skilful engraver on steel, and employed him to engrave in a handsome manner my portrait, from a photograph which I furnished him. That done, I watched the street door of the bindery of Williams & Abercrombie, at six o'clock, the hour when the men came out from their work, and selecting the one whom I judged suited for my purpose, I followed him.

As I had anticipated, he had not walked many squares when he entered the door of an ale-house, and seated himself at a table. I entered a moment later, and accosted him as an old acquamtance. He started, stared at me in a manner that convinced me he feared recognition, and as he saw in me nothing familiar, an expression of relief crossed his face. I knew then he was the man for my work, and did not hesitate for a moment.

'You are a book-binder?' said I.

'Why do you say that?' he answered quickly.

'Because I saw you come from the bindery of Williams & Abercrombie just now.'

'Well, suppose I was, what do you want?'

'I thought at first that I had known you at Leeds, but no matter, what I want is this. In a few days there will come to your bindery, from the printers, a new work by William Mason, entitled, 'An Analysis of Protection Fallacies.' I wish to translate this work into the French language, and desire you to procure me, at the earliest possible moment, a complete copy of the unbound sheets.'

'And what am I to receive for so dangerous a service?' inquired the binder.

'Five pounds; bring them to this address, and you will be paid that amount,' replied I, handing him a card.

'Very well, you shall have them the evening of the day the edition is received for binding.'

After treating him to a quart of ale, I took my departure.

The next day I procured from a tradesman a check for a small amount on the Commercial Bank of London. I called at the bank and requested to have it certified, as I desired to send it to Sheffield to pay for some cutlery I had ordered. In a moment my check was returned to me stamped with the seal of the bank, and attested by the signature of the cashier. Within forty-eight hours I possessed a seal—the work of the engraver who was making my portrait—the impression of which was exactly identical with that upon the check.

I procured the seal on Saturday, and all day Sunday practiced writing the signature of the bank cashier, Henry Shackleford, until I could produce so close an imitation as to defy I was certain, the scrutiny of a bank expert.

The next thing I was overjoyed by a visit from the binder, who brought the promised sheets and received in exchange a five-pound note.

I had learned from my conversation with Mr. Mason that his work would contain a table giving the yearly emigration from the ports of Great Britain and Ireland.

With trembling hands I turned over the sheets and found, to my great joy, that the table referring to the port of Liverpool was the last on the list and concluded the chapter.

The work contained numerous foot-notes in ruby type, and the next morning, thanks to a skilful printer, whose acquaintance I had cultivated for the purpose, page 417 of my special edition of William Mason's great work, contained a foot note, printed in ruby type, and so cleverly executed as to present an appearance uniform with the notes.

The next Wednesday morning I had in my hands an octavo volume, handsomely bound in tree calf, containing as a frontispiece my portrait in steel, with, 'Yours truly, William Mason,' printed under it in my handwriting.

I wrote something complimentary on the fly-leaf and sent the book by express to Mr. Fairchild, at his residence in Liverpool. I enclosed a letter thanking him for his kindness, referring him to page 417 for my acknowledgement of his valuable information, and concluded by saying that I would call on him at his residence on Friday evening.

Friday evening at exactly eight o'clock I was ringing at the door of Mr. Fairchild's elegant mansion; another moment, and I was in the drawing-room, receiving the enthusiastic congratulations of the wealthy banker.

'Let us retire to the library, where we will be free from interruptions,' said Mr. Fairchild.

The volume I had sent him lay upon his table, and we were soon deep in discussions of great national questions.

Before leaving for my hotel, I told Mr. Fairchild that it was my intention to sail the next afternoon for New York. He expressed surprise that I should leave England just as my great work was in press, and before it was given to the world.

'I am the owner of considerable real estate in New York and Philadelphia,' said I, 'and I go to the former city to close the purchase of a fine block of houses, for which my agent has been several weeks negotiating. None of my friends in London, except, of course, my family, know of my departure, else I am certain they would find means to detain me. I shall return in a month, by which time the ripple, which I trust I may be pardoned for thinking, the appearance of my book may occasion in certain circles, will have subsided, and I will have escaped all that excitement and anxiety, which has always been peculiarly disagreeable to me.'

'But I shall see you again before you sail.'

'Certainly. I will call on you at your bank, at eleven o'clock to-morrow, if that will be convenient?'

'Entirely so, I shall expect you at that hour.'

It was not without misgivings that I ascended the marble steps of the Underwriter's Bank, the next morning, but my hand did not tremble as I knocked at the door of the private office of its president.

Mr. Fairchild was expecting me, and gave me a kindly greeting, and we passed half an hour in pleasant conversation.

I said to him that not wishing even my bankers—who were personal friends—to know of my intended absence, I had not procured exchange on New York, but had brought with me my own check on the Commercial Bank, for thirty thousand pounds, certified by Mr. Shackleford the cashier.

'Let me see your check, Mr. Mason,' said the banker, 'the Commercial is our correspondent in London I can give you an exchange on the Chemical Bank of New York, if you desire.'

'I am much obliged to you,' replied I. 'I am well acquainted in New York, but it is hardly business-like to present a check on a foreign bank.'

Mr. Fairchild rang a bell, sent for the cashier, formally introduced me as William Mason, of London, and requested him to prepare a draft on the Chemical Bank, of New York, to my order, for thirty thousand pounds. A moment later, I had endorsed my check, and received in exchange the bank draft.

After thanking Mr. Fairchild for his kindness, I arose to depart.

'I will see you on my return,' said I. 'My vessel, the 'Abyssinia,' sails at four o'clock, and as I have some small purchases to make, I must be moving.'

'I regret that I cannot go with you, Mr. Mason, but I cannot well leave the office until the bank closes at three o'clock, at which hour I dine at my club. I had counted on the pleasure of introducing you there to-day, but I fear it will be too late for you.'

I thanked Mr. Fairchild—it would not be possible—shook him heartily by the hand, and left the bank.

At exactly fifteen minutes past three I again knocked at the door of the room of the bank President, and was told by a clerk that he had left for the day.

I then asked to see the cashier.

'I am very sorry to trouble you again,' said I, 'particularly as it is past your banking hours, but it is reported on the street that two New York banks did not open this morning and that a panic is imminent. I know the Chemical Bank to be a solid institution, and am, doubtless, too suspicious; but if you can give banknotes of large denominations for this draft I will sleep easier on my voyage, and be under obligations to you.'

The cashier thought me needlessly alarmed—he did not believe the reports—but he would only be too happy to accommodate me, and handed me sixty Bank of England notes for five hundred pounds each, at the same time advising me to deposit them in the safe on board the steamer.

I hastened to secure a passage on the 'Abyssima' in the name of William Mason, and then took the four o'clock express for London, and within ten days I was at St. Petersburg in Russia.

What Robert Fairchild said when he found he had paid thirty thousand pounds for the addition of a single volume to his library, I never knew. I watched the London papers, but saw no note of it.

The matter was doubtless suppressed to enable the Metropolitan police to arrest the false William Mason on the arrival of the 'Abyssinia' in New York.

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

For fear Wiggins will not do it, we will predict frost between the first of May and the 30th of June, and hot weather between the 10th of July and 20th of August! Guard against being frozen in July or August! This forecast and advice is given out of pure love to humanity at large.

A GENERAL STAMPEDE.

Never was such a rush made for any Drug Store as is now at Spaulding's for a Trial Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. All persons affected with Asthma, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Severe Coughs or any affection of the Throat and Lungs, can get a Trial Bottle of this great remedy free, by calling at the above Drug Store.

The young ladies in Richmond, Va., are going to get up an anti-cigarette society. The question upon which they are divided now is whether it will be better to refuse to kiss all the young men who soil their lips with tobacco, or to agree to kiss all those who do not. Most of them favor the latter proposition.

"The Hindoo widow," chants the Boston Transcript, "is the only one that cremates. The others remate." A lady afflicted with a nauseating case of catarrh, whether she is single or married, probably longs for cremation (of the disease, if not of her person). The sickening, revolting breath, foul discharges, racking pains and other characteristics of Catarrh, render life a burden. Ely's Cream Balm is a reliable, fragrant yet certain cure for all such cases. This balm is not a liquid or snuff, and is easily applied. "My head and throat ached so severely, from Catarrh," said Major Downs, Military Instructor, Mt. Pleasant Academy, Sing Sing, N. Y., "that I am obliged to give up everything and keep quiet. Ely's Cream Balm cured me." This exquisite preparation will cure any case of Catarrh. 50 cents.

Book Notices.

The April number of FRANK LESLIE'S Popular Monthly is already filled out with delightful reading and elegant embellishments. The chromo presented with it, "A Basket of Flowers," is a gem. "The Architectural Progress of New York City," the opening article, "The Descent of the British Crown," by A. H. Guernsey; "Ancient Laborers and Princes of Grand Chimu and New Granada," etc., etc., are interesting and profusely illustrated. The serial, "The Beautiful Countess of Clairville," is continued, and there are admirable short stories, sketches, etc., by popular writers. Geo. Meredith, Geo. Weatherly, etc., contributes some excellent poems, and the miscellaneous articles, paragraphs, etc., abound with entertainment and information. The price of a single copy is 25 cents only, $3 a year, postpaid. Address, Mrs. FRANK LESLIE, Publisher, 53, 55, and 57 Park Place, New York.

The last number of the Art Interchange, contains the most beautiful designs ever offered for the use of amateur and art students. Two exquisitely designed heads for plaque decoration form the supplement. In the body of the paper are designs for different kinds of artist metal work, such as vases, pails, and flower stands, in brass, bronze, silver, and iron. The Art Interchange is published at 140 Nassau street, New York. Subscription price, $2. Sample copy and catalogue of other publications sent on receipt of six cents in postage stamps.

St. Nicholas for April is one of the best numbers. Of the serial stories, Frank R. Stockton's "Story of Viteau" comes all too soon to its conclusion; while J. T. Trowbridge's "The Tinkham Brothers' Tide-mill" gets the young heroes into a serious predicament. There are other attractions and stories, making it a very valuable magazine.

One of the most entertaining and useful magazines is Demorest's Monthly Magazine for April, which does not contain a single article which cannot be read with profit and pleasure. "The Admiral's Ward" is continued, and among the shorter stories are "A Romance in Purple," and the "Story of the Maelstorm," a translation from the Norwegian. Jenny June gives another chapter of "How We Live in New York," Miss Kate Sanborn an amusing sketch, entitled "The Conundrum of the Nineteenth Century," and Miss Hetta Ward, "Home Art and Home Comfort." These, with many other articles of interest, and "Current Topics," make up as interesting a number of this readable magazine as we have yet had.

The April number of LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE challenges attention by the variety, ability, and interest of its contributions. The opening paper, which is beautifully illustrated, has for its subject East Hampton, Long Island, the summer resort of a throng of artists. "A Pilgrimage Down East," by R. Riordan, gives capital sketches of places and people—Newport and Concord, Holmes and Whittier, etc.—in a piquant style. "Mr Freeman on American Speech" is the title of a racy piece of criticism, exposing the blunders and misconceptions of a writer who is himself never weary of detecting inaccuracies in others, and who has needed to be taught his own liability to error. One of the most striking papers in the number is one on "The Climate Cure," by Frank D. Y. Carpenter, who dispels some common illusions, and depicts very forcibly and graphically their mischievous tendencies and results. Miss Tincker's serial, "The Jewell in the Lotos," is the most captivating story now running through any of the magazines. Of the remaining fiction, "An Every-Day Affair" and "Clock-Work" gives faithful pictures, humorous and pathetic, of rural New England life. The editorial departments are as well filled and interesting as usual.

Every article in the April Number of HARPER'S MAGAZINE, for one reason or another invites especial notice, and no better Number, from an artistic point of view has ever been issued. The Frontispiece is an engraving from the portrait of Washington Irving by Gilbert Stuart Newton and is published apropos of the centenary of Irving's birth. Mr. Geo. William Curtis gives, in the Editor's Easy Chair, an interesting and appreciative sketch of the writer, whom he styles New York's "most famous man." Colonel Higginson, in the sixth chapter of American History, entitled "An English Nation," gives a concise and comprehensive review of the Early English settlements in this country. Mr. Geo. Ticknor Curtis contributes the first of two papers on "The Treaty of Peace or Independence," ratified a century ago, with six portraits. The Hon. John Bigelow, in an article entitled "The Heir-Presumptive to the Imperial Crown of Mexico," gives an interesting chapter of secret history connected with Maximilian's unhappy reign in Mexico. Poems are contributed by T. B. Aldrich, R. H. Stoddard, and John B. Tabb. The Editorial Departments are full of timely and interesting matter. The Drawer for this month is conducted by its earliest editor, Dr. S. I. PRIME.

In the North American Review for April, the scriptuaal and legal aspects of Divorce are presented respectively by the Rev. Dr. Theodore D. Woolsey, and by Judge John A. Jameson, a jurist whose long experience lends to his observations a very special value. Dr. P. Bender, a Canadian, under the title, "A Canadian View of Annexation," makes a forcible presentation of the reasons which incline many citizens of the Dominion to regard with favor the idea of absorption by the United States. Senator John A. Logan sets forth the need which exists for "National Aid to Public Schools" in the several States and territories. The Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby writes of "The Dangerous Classes," meaning the manipulators of corporation stocks, and the men who use them for nefarious purposes. James C. Welling, President of Columbian University, treats of "Race Education." "The Water Supply of Cities" is discussed by Charles F. Wingate, "Ethical Systems" by Prof. F. H. Hedge, "Street Begging" by Rev. Dr. Charles F. Deems, and "Criticism and Christianity" by O. B. Frothingham. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York, and for sale by book-sellers generally.

The Young Ladies' Journal for April, just received from the International News Company of New York, contains a large variety of fashion plates and designs for fancy work, the usual supplement, A beautiful "Much Ado About Nothing," design for splashers, and toilet mats; dressing slippers, crochet lace for mantels, or furniture, drapery, corner embroidery. A fine double panorama of fashion in colors of twenty figures of the latest Paris Fashions, besides entertaining reading, stories, music, etc. For sale by the Peabody News Company.

The April number of BALLOU'S MAGAZINE contains a liberal instalment of the popular novel of the day. "The Belle of Australia," by William H. Thomas, author of "The Gold Hunters." "A Slaver's Adventures," and so forth. It is growing in interest, if possible, and the advance sheets have been sold to a Sidney Australia, paper, for a large sum and have been translated into French and Spainish. The April number of Ballou's is remarkably attractive in its table of contents, and every family in the country should take it regularly. Send ten cents for a sample copy, and see how much you will like it. Ballou has one subscriber who has paid up his subscription to the year 1900. No publication in the world can boast of such a novelty. Thomes & Talbot, 23 Hawley St., Boston.

The April ATLANTIC opens with the first instalment of Henry James' "Daisy Miller," not the story of that name which everybody has read, but a dramatization of it, with the new characters and scenes. This is followed by "Pillow-Smoothing Authors," an essay by Dr. Holmes, who furnished a prelude on Night-Caps, Charles Dudley Warner contributes a remarkably excellent article on "Modern Fiction," which is peculiarly opportune in view of the recent discussions, notably in England, of some leading American novelists. Miss Sarah Orne Jewett has a delightfully characteristic New England story entitled "A New Parishioner." Richard Grant White contributes an article on the "Bacon-Shakespeare Craze," which is remarkably instructive and readable. Elizabeth Robins writes of "Stage Buffons" in different countries and times. There are poems by Mr. Aldrich, Rose Hawthorne Lathrop, and others, together with reviews of important recent books, and the usual variety of the Contributors' Club. Published by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

PETERSON'S MAGAZINE for April is already on our table, as welcome as the flowers of Spring, and quite as fresh and beautiful. It is not too late to subscribe for 1883, as all the back numbers can be supplied, if desired. The price is but two dollars, and to clubs it is much cheaper. Specimens are sent, gratis, to those wishing to get up clubs, and handsome premiums are given for getting them up. Subscribe at once. Address Chas. J. Peterson, 306 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

"A good little girl sat under a tree,
Sewing as long as her eyes could see,
Then folded her work and placed it right.
And said, dear work, good night, good night."

These pretty words belong to a pleasing home-song, the words of which are by Lord Houghton. It arrives in company with eight other good pieces all just issued from the presses of Oliver Ditson & Co., Boston. Price (35 cts.) The other pieces are: "I know not why," (30 cts.) Quartet for female voices, by L. O. Emerson. "My fairest Child," (30 cts.) song by Behrend. "Love abides," (35 cts.) song by Roeckel. "The Skipper," (35 cts.) sea-song by Jude. "Mollie, the Rose of Glendea," (40 cts.) with Picture Title, by Robert Challoner. "Grapes of Bordeaux," Polka, (35 cts.) Pas redouble by Wenzel. "Sweet Kiss Polka," (35 cts.) for violin and piano, by Kinkel.

"On the Wing; Rambling Notes of a trip to the Pacific." Many of the most vivacious books of travel are written by women, and this volume by the lively correspondent of the Boston Journal who signs herself M. E. B., is sure to be popular. Mrs. Blake unites a great fund of practical observation with descriptive enthusiasm. Her fresh and lively spirits raise the commonplace above its level, and invest with interest things that in other hands would be dull. In some magical way she spreads before us a panorama of beautiful scenery, introducing into our heads at the same time many statistics. Her pictures of Salt Lake City and California, and the mental and moral condition of the inhabitants are very impressive. From a practical standpoint the book gives an excellent description of a journey across the continent, telling how to travel, what to see and how to see. Published by Lee & Shepard. Price $1.00.

IT SHOULD be no news to the people of Massachusetts, that, under certain conditions, bodies of paupers are allowed to be used for the advancement of science, or to speak plainer, to be dissected. The idea may be horrible to the sensitive mind, not accustomed to such things, but the law allowing it is a wise one. That many people of the state are ignorant of these matters, not only of the fact, but of the mode of procedure, is one of the strongholds of Gen. Butler in carrying on the investigation of the Tewksbury Alms House. "Bodies are taken to the medical school and dissected. Horrible," say the lackeys of Butler. So it is, in one sense of the word. The amputation of a limb, even when it is necessary to save a man's life, is horrible. But it must be done, and in this case of the Alms House, there is no proof that the law has been violated. The parties who have testified are aggrieved people. They have been discharged from the service of the State, for misdemeanors of various kinds. But they all swear by Butler. Look at the testimony of one of them. He admitted he was discharged "for getting drunk, as you do," referring to those who conducted the examination. Being asked if he referred to the Governor or himself, by the questioner, he promptly answered, "not to the Governor, by any manner of means." Oh, no! Gov. Butler has no faults, in the eyes of these people. Whatever else they say, they are very careful to keep on the right side of His Excellency.

But, seriously, there can be no objection on the part of any fair minded citizen, to an investigation of alleged abuse, in Tewksbury Alms House or any other public institution. On the contrary it should be urged and defended. But a discrimination should be made between the testimony of men of doubtful veracity, whose spite is very apparent, who know just what they are expected to say, and that of people who are in position to know the truth of these matters. Above all, if our Governor has no abuses to set forth further than has yet appeared, he will show himself to be as ignorant of the law in regard to these institutions as are his followers.

THE SCHOOL Committee, with the beginning of next term of the schools, will try the experiment of having one of their number devote two or three days in each week to the supervision of the schools. They have chosen Geo. Fred Osgood to perform thus duty, and it is expected that he will be able to visit every school in the town as often as once in three weeks—that enabling him, and the rest of the Committee through him, to know the wants and note the progress of the schools in a systematic manner. We think it will be found that this is a move in the right direction—and one which will lead, in the progress of time, to the office of inspector of schools. And let us say just here that, in choosing Mr. Osgood to attend to the visiting, they have made a wise selection. Neither of the clergymen on the Board could find the time in the midst of their other duties, to do it. Not only the educational department but all the little wants and details pertaining to the school buildings, the supply of teachers, repairing, &c., will be looked after by Mr. Osgood, and we doubt not he will be able in many ways to save money for the town, in addition to the service being an invaluable aid for the guidance of the Committee at large.

WE THINK the town will have reason to regret before the year is out that they decided at the adjourned meeting to cut down the police appropriation. It is to be borne in mind that the amount expended for day and Sunday police, as given in the town, report includes the pay of the officers who are on duty in the evening until 10 o'clock. It is well known that in the evening at certain seasons, and on the Sabbath, there is the greatest need of a police in this town. However much we may regret this necessity, the stubborn fact remains; and because for this service half the amount appropriated is expended it does not look like an extravagance on the part of the town, when the matter is understood. It is to be regretted that it was not explained at the meeting; as we think a plain statement of these facts would have produced a very different result. Absolute necessity, last year, compelled the appointment of extra police force and the appropriation was exceeded. If $500 had been added to the appropriation, instead of being taken from it, the town, in our judgment, would have been the gainer.

Last Thursday evening an immense concourse of people were attracted to Salem, by the announcement that the new store of FRANK COUSINS would be opened to the public for the first time. The Naumkeag Street railway Co. were taxed to their utmost capacity to accommodate their patrons in this town and Beverly. An opening like this, where the store is trimmed and decorated with goods, where the salesgirls and all the employes are in their places—but no goods are sold—and where an attractive programme of choice music is furnished by a band, is a novelty for the city of Salem. It is estimated that more than twenty thousand ladies and gentlemen were within the store between 6 and 10 o'clock on that evening. Indeed, it was an occasion of surprises; while all were surprised to see so many people in attendance, those people were almost universally surprised at the magnitude of the store and the completeness of its numerous departments, the arrangements for displaying goods and the full assortment in each and every department. 64 brilliant gas jets light the establishment, and the building is heated by two mammoth furnaces. The entire front has been made new, and the show windows are elegantly arranged. They are very capacious, affording space for the display of large quantities of goods. The many patrons of the Bee Hive need not to be reminded of the goods kept by Mr. Cousins. Suffice it to say that the assortment in all the departments is more varied than ever before, and the low prices of the old "Bee Hive" will be the rule in Mr. Cousins' new store. In the department of worsteds there was a specially fine display, and among the many wholesale men present, we noticed Mr. S. H. Littlefield of W. H. Horstman & Sons, New York, the leading importers in this country of this line of goods. An abundance of hot coffee was furnished up stairs by caterer Wentworth, and previous to the opening Mr. Cousins gave his entire force of employes an elegant supper, at which Mayor Hill presided. Since the opening the store has been crowded with ladies, who were unable the first evening to see its full beauty; and Mr. Cousins has been the recipient of many congratulations upon the elegance and convenience of his arrangements, all of which he justly deserves.

Newspapers, say somebody, are valuable to material prosperity. They advertise the village, country or locality. They spread before the reader a map on which may be traced character, design and progress. If a stranger calls at the hotel he first inquires for the village paper; if a friend comes from a distance, the next thing after a family greeting he inquires for your village or country paper, and you feel discomforted if you are unable to find a late copy, and are confounded if you are compelled to say you do not take it. The newspaper is just as necessary to fit a man for his true position in life as food or raiment. Show us a ragged, barefooted boy rather than an ignorant one. His head will cover his feet in after life, if he is well supplied with newspapers. Show us the child that is eager for newspapers. He will make the man of mark in life, if you gratify the desire for knowledge. Other things being equal, it is a rule that never fails. Give the children newspapers.

We desire to call particular attention to the adv. of W. C. Packard & Co., and to their new assortment of furniture, including the latest novelties in parlor and chamber sets, as well as odd pieces, covered in the richest and most elegant designs. Packard & Co's reputation for first class goods is well known; their facilities for upholstery goods and work in this line are unsurpassed, and our readers will consult their own advantage by giving their store a call.

We are pleased to call the attention of our readers to the new advertisement of Whitcomb & Carter of Beverly, to be found in our columns. They are connected with one of the largest seed houses in New England, and their selection of market garden seeds is the choicest to be found. They are also agents for the North American Swivel Plow, and other farming tools and implements. Read their advertisement, and give them a call.

The Naumkeag Clothing Co., are out with their spring announcement of clothing. Their display of seasonable garments for spring and summer wear was never finer and all the leading styles are to be found at their store, at prices which defy competition. In boy's and young men's suits this firm make one of their specialties. Bear this in mind when looking for anything in this line.

If any of our readers are in need of bridal presents, or anything in the line of silver ware or jewelry, there is no better place to get their wants supplied than at the reliable and old established store of DANIEL LOW, in Salem. His windows are a continual feast to the eye, and inside Mr. Low can show the the most elegant line of all kinds of jewelry to be found in Salem.

If you want some good hay, call and see us. L. F. Moulton & Co., 26 Central street.

SO. PEABODY.—Rev. J. W. Colwell exchanged pulpits with Rev. C. B. Rice of Danvers Centre last Sunday.

The annual spring fires were started in the woods last Sunday.

The Ponds have commenced breaking up in this section of the town.

R. P. Brown is going to put on teams to help grade the road for the L. & B Horse R. R., as soon as they start.

Mr. Geo. Richardson has built a large henery on the place recently leased by him on Lynn St.

If some of the young hoodlums think that they can come up here and make disturbances Sunday nights, they will be mistaken.

The work of removing the wall for the widening of Washington St., has been commenced at the Stimpson field.

Mr. O. F. Newhall is to put up a large wind mill for the pumping of water to be used in his green houses and hot bed.

Quite a number of prizes came into this place from the late fair of the Peabody Fire Relief Association.

H. N. Batchelder is to do the grading and filling up of Spring pond.

It is reported occasionally in the various local papers that "there will be a prayer meeting in the Church here Wednesday evening," as if this was an unusual or occasional event. It should be known that the Wednesday evening prayer meeting is a regular institution with us, and that this occasional notice is, to say the least, somewhat ludicrous.

It was reported that the Governor's Fast day Proclamation was not read from our pulpit; and we learn from Rev. Mr. Colwell, that it would have been read, had it been received, notwithstanding its gratuitous advice to clergymen and its glaring inconsistency in exhorting the people to pray for all political objects, and in entreating ministers to say nothing about them.

It has been arranged that Prof. J. W. Churchill will give select readings next week, Thursday evening, at Institute Hall, for the benefit of the "Church building fund," particulars see adv.

As Mr. Daniel Brown, was hurrying along Lynn St., South Peabody, last Wednesday evening, he saw a horse hitched to a buggy without any owner, and took the team and came to the square to look for him. The team proved to belong to Mr. Scott of Danvers, the contractor. It was put up at Simonds' livery stable, and he called for it on Thursday morning.

The repairs at the depot of the Eastern R. R. have now been completed, and reflect much credit upon the managers of the road. The improvements have long been needed; the office has been too small for the accommodation of both roads, and it was thought the space of the old baggage room could be utilized by the erection of a building outside. The old ticket office has been changed from the small office into a large, roomy affair, which, with the addition of a large bay window, makes a splendid roomfor our two general agents. The carpenter work was done by the Eastern Railroad carpenters in a workmanlike manner under the foremanship of Mr. Cressey. The painting shows great taste. The depot is painted a light olive green with dark trimmings finished with red on the outside, on the inside the walls are painted olive and the panels at the bottom are a drab. The work was done by the railroad painters, the doors are grained black walnut grain. This work was done by D. S. Sullivan, of Boston, in a splendid manner. The water closets have been remodeled and put in thorough repair, the water faucets which formerly were situated on the northern and southern end of the depot, have been changed to the centre of the building near the old baggage room, which has been removed to the outside of the depot in the building prepared for that purpose. Where the old baggage room formerly was, an entrance has been cut through from the gents' room to the ladies', making it much more convenient for the patrons of the road. This spring the company propose to take up the platform around the depot and replace it by a concrete walk.

That Peabody is pretty thoroughly devoted to secret societies is apparent from the following list representing the various orders; Jordan Lodge of Masons; Holten Lodge of Odd Fellows; American Hibernian Benevolent Association: Star of Hope Lodge of Good Templars; Ancient Order of United Workmen; Equitable Aid Union No. 38; Independent Order of United Essenians; Union Post G. A. R.; Bowditch Lodge, Knights of Honor; Justin McCarthy Branch of the Land League; Fitch Poole Council Legion of Honor; Mutual Council Royal Arcanum; St. John's Catholic Total Abstinence Society; Father Mathew C. T. A. Society; and the United Order of the Golden Cross. Besides these there are a number of social and business clubs, several temperance societies and the tanners and curriers union.

PEABODY.

At the fair the other evening, Mr. W. W. Reed, chairman of the Committee on prizes, having lost his glasses, was presented with a pair of very large dimensions, a pair that looked as if they might have fitted some of the giants of old. Mr. Jas. Reed accepted but did not agree to wear them.

L. R. Power the shoe man showed commendable enterprise in issuing a score card, containing the list of prizes and his advertisement, for the drawing of the Season ticket prizes at the town hall. It also furnished a very convenient card for those who wished to keep a record of the drawing, for reference.

The teachers at the Center school presented the retiring teacher, Miss Hattie Chase, with a very handsome illustrated book of poems by Aldrich, bound in tree calf, last Friday. Miss Chase has also received several presents from friends. She will reside in Cleveland, Ohio, with her sister who is a teacher there.

We desire to call attention to the Frazer Acoustic Telephone, advertised in our columns. Mr. Frazer is in town and yesterday put in one for George A. Whitney, which we understand is a perfect success. All the telephones are warranted, and they are not expensive. References of other well known parties are given.

The Unitarian Sunday School Society will hold a meeting in the Barton Square Church, Salem, Tuesday evening, April 10, at 7.30 P. M. An essay on "The Doctrinal Question in Sunday School" will be read by Rev. Charles F. Dole, of Jamaica Plain, and the subject discussed by others. All are cordially invited to attend.

The enterprising merchants in this vicinity are pressing pretty closely upon our advertising columns, with their announcements for the spring season. Reader it is the liberal advertiser who may be depended upon always, to have the largest and freshest stock of goods, while his increased sales permit him to give lower prices than anyone else.

A good many people are making the mistake of putting two cent stamps on letters under the impression that the reduction went into effect on the passage of the bill by Congress. The reduction does not go into effect until October 1. It should not be forgotten either that an unstamped check cannot be honored at the banks until July.

The Danvers Mirror says: "A paragraph in the Mirror of last week in reference to the purchase of the Bass River House at the Port, was calculated to give the impression that it was to be used for the sale of liquor. Mr. Heffernan, who has exchanged his place in Peabody for this at the Port, is a man engaged in other business, having been in the employ of Messrs. Batchelder & Co., as driver of one of their coal teams between the Port and Peabody for the past ten years, and living at the latter place."

The 54th annual meeting of the Essex County Teachers' Association will be held at North Andover on Friday next, April 6th, commencing at 9.30 A. M. and continuing through the day and evening. Papers will be read by Prof. Hagar and Miss Plummer of the Normal School at Salem, B. B. Russell of Lawrence, N. B. Sargent of Manchester, John A. Nichols of Yonkers, N. Y., Francis W. Anthony of Bradford, and discussions will follow each. Free return tickets will be furnished members of the Association who may attend.

Thomas W. Peasley has been reappointed Chief of Police by the Selectmen, and Thos. N. Barnaby resumes his old position as Captain of the Night Watch. There will be but one officer on duty in the day time, owing to the reduction of the appropriation by the town, and Mr. Peasley will be that officer. His reappointment gives general satisfaction. He has been a faithful and efficient officer, and we feel sure the preservation of good order on the street and proper enforcement of the law will not suffer at his hands.

Secretary Preston gives notice that the Essex Agricultural Society will hold a Farmers' Institute and Field Meeting, at Dr. Loring's farm in Salem, on Tuesday, April 17th, at which there will be an exhibition and trial of sulky, swivel, and common plows, harrows, and manure spreaders. If stormy it will occur on the next pleasant day. Manufacturers and dealers in agricultural implements are invited to exhibit and test them. Entries should be made with John G. Page, at the farm, who will make such arrangements as may be necessary for a satisfactory exhibition. All interested are invited to attend.

The meetings of the Murray Club for this season closed on Monday evening with a supper, after which a series of toasts were given by Geo. Randall, to which responses were made by the President, Chas. S. Goldthwait, Rev. F. W. Sprague, and Messrs. H. A. Harrington, A. B. Tasker, C. E. Hoag, and Geo. Chandler. Misses Nellie Bartlett and Carrie E. Bomer, also responded to sentiments prepared for them, the latter with an excellent and appropriate poem. After brief remarks by the toastmaster the rest of the evening was devoted to sociality. It was voted during the evening to accept an invitation from the Unity Club to meet with them next Monday evening.

The relatives of Mr. George W. Potter received the sad tidings last Monday evening of his decease in California, whither he had gone on a visit to his daughter who is residing there. Mr. Potter was well known as the senior partner of the firm of Potter, Batchelder & Co., coal dealers. This firm bought out the business of the late Moses Black, of Danversport, some twenty years ago. Some years ago the firm was dissolved and Mr. Potter engaged in the grocery business. Mr. Potter was at one time collector of the South church of which he was a constant attendant. He was an active republican and always took great interest in the affairs of the town. He leaves a widow and three daughters, one residing in California, one in New York City, and Mrs. Albert H. Merrill of this town.

The Lyceum and Library Committee organized last Monday night by the choice of Thomas M. Stimpson, chairman; George M. Foster, Secretary; Frank C. Merrill, Treasurer; J. Warren Upton, Librarian. The following are the Committees: Peabody Library Committee, Theodore M. Osborne, Thos. Carroll, Frank C. Merrill, O. B. Chadwick, George M. Foster, Thos. M. Stimpson, F. H. Appleton, Lyman P. Osborne. Eben Dale Sutton Library, G. F. Osgood, F. H. Appleton, Thos. Carroll, O. B. Chadwick, Theo. M. Osborne, Francis Nugent. Lecture Committee, Geo. M. Foster, G. F. Osgood, Lyman P. Osborne, Chas. C. Pike, H. V. Baxton. Finance Committee, Frank C. Merrill, T. M. Osborne, G. F. Osgood. $600 was appropriated for lectures, and $1350 for the Library for the ensuing year.

Last Thursday evening a large number of the many friends of Mr. Thomas E. Eagan, comprising ladies and gentlemen from Peabody and Salem, assembled at his residence on Midway street, and presented him with a handsome easy chair. Mr. Francis Nugent made the presentation speech, which was in poetic form, to which Mr. Eagan happily replied. The evening was pleasantly spent with music, singing, games, etc. In the interim a bountiful repast was served by the family. The party departed at a late hour, pleased with their evening's enjoyment, and their kind reception, wishing their friend a long and happy life embracing many hours of peaceful enjoyment of his easy chair.

MON AMI CIGAR,

BEATS THE WORLD.

We are receiving orders from all parts of the country for this brand. The following letter from a leading Boston Merchant, who accidentally fell in with one of our customers, explains itself:—

TO OWNERS OR KEEPERS OF DOGS.

Extracts from Chapter 102 of Public Statutes:

SECT. 80. Every owner or keeper of a dog of three months old or over shall annually, on or before the thirtieth day of April, cause it to be registered, numbered, described, and licensed for one year from the first day of the ensuing May, in the office of the clerk of the city or town wherein said dog is kept, and shall cause it to wear around its neck a collar distinctly marked with its owner's name and its registered number.

SECT. 81. An owner of a dog may at any time have it licensed until the first day of the ensuing May; and a person becoming the owner or keeper of a dog after the first day of May, not duly licensed, shall cause it to be numbered, described and licensed as provided in the preceding section.

SECT. 82. The fee for every license shall be two dollars for a male dog, and five dollars for a female dog.

SECT. 87. Whoever keeps a dog contrary to the provisions of this chapter shall forfeit fifteen dollars, five dollars of which shall be paid to the complainant, and ten dollars to the treasurer of the county in which the dog is kept.

SECT. 90. The mayor of each city and the chairman of the selectmen of each town shall annually, within ten days from the first day of July, issue a warrant to one or more police officers or constables, directing them to proceed forthwith to kill or cause to be killed all dogs within such city or town not licensed and collared according to the provisions of this chapter, and to enter complaint against the owners or keepers thereof; and any person may, and every police officer and constable shall, kill or cause to be killed all such dogs whenever or wherever found.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The grand fair in aid of the Firemen's Relief Association of this town, and under the direct management of a committee from the different fire companies, with D. B. Lord, chairman, and J. B. Reith, secretary, which has occupied the attention of the public so largely during the past week, closed last Monday, an immense crowd being present at the town hall to witness the final proceedings and especially the announcement of the numbers of the lucky prize winners. It is not often that a public enterprise has received so large and so liberal a patronage as has been accorded to this fair. From the opening to the close it has received the cordial support of all classes, who have thus been glad to testify their interest in the worthy object for which it has been held. Those who have attended regularly and those who have only dropped in occasionally have found a large number of features especially noteworthy, and which have drawn the "ducats" from their pockets and at the same time furnished much enjoyment. The fancy and other sales tables which were well supplied were liberally patronized, while in the disposal of the articles offered by ticket, there has been no lack of subscribers from the crowds that have been in attendance. On the night of the opening and on Friday evening the Salem Brass Band was in attendance, and on other evenings the string band. The fair was visited last Friday evening by Steamer 3 and Hose 4 of Salem, and Ocean Hose No. 3 of Marblehead.

The Fair closed Monday night with the drawing of the ticket prizes at Town Hall. A large delegation of the season ticket holders were present, to see that everything was conducted fairly, and at about half past eight the committee, which had been previously selected to superintend the drawing, entered the hall. The gentlemen were Cyrus T. Batchelder, Orville B. Chadwick, Benj. Beckett, Jr., Starr C. Hewitt and Albert Vittum. It was found that 2502 tickets had been sold, and the coupons which had been previously counted and put up in packages, containing one hundred each, were put in the large wheel by Mr. Chadwick in sight of all. The wheel was kept turning until the coupons had become sufficiently shaken up to satisfy everybody; two lads were selected from the audience, one to draw the numbers and the other the prizes. The drawing was successful and entirely satisfactory. The following is the list of the ticket prizes:

The gents' easy chair given to the morocco manufacturer receiving the largest number of votes, was won by S. S. Littlefield, Mr. Littlefield having received 550 votes; and L. B. Southwick 144 1-2. A pair of silver torches was given to the fire company selling the largest number of season tickets. It was won by Steamer No. 1., of Brockton. Some twenty book prizes are yet to be disposed of, and will be drawn in Grand Army Hall Friday evening.

We received a call yesterday from Mr. Herbert L. Tibbetts, formerly of this town, but now a locomotive engineer on the "Nickle Plated" R. R., so called, in the West. He is a son of the late Horace Tibbetts, who will be remembered by our older residents, and who removed from this town to Marietta Ohio, where he died, and in the vicinity of which his widow and family now reside. Mr. Tibbets is a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of the Fort Wayne Lodge.

Now is the time to get a nice spring suit of Distin & Howley in the Bank Building. They have an excellent assortment of spring and summer patterns in great variety. Their work is the best and their prices reasonable. Call and see them.

West Peabody.—The attendance at the meeting of the West Peabody Farmers' Club last Friday, was not so largely attended as some of the previous ones, owing to the bad weather and sickness in the families of some. The exercises were opened by singing by the Chorus Club, after which the report of the previous meeting was read. Mr. J. S. Needham spoke in favor of giving the Chorus Club a benefit, and he was warmly seconded by other members present and it was voted to leave the matter with Bowman Viles. The president then introduced the speaker of the evening, J. S. Needham, who said the few remarks he would make would be from his own personal experience and observation; that he secured great enjoyment from the fields and gardens, while to him animals were repugnant, he was as much at home in the fruit field as in the garden and that the best small fruits for New England would be the subject of his remarks. First, the currant, of which the speaker named several kinds and their advantages for wine and jelly, but owing to the currant worm it was not profitable to raise. Second, the raspberry; and several foreign varieties that had been tried were named. This berry required shade, and was always a failure to those who made a business of raising them, as they are winter killed in the North and are scorched by the hot sun of the South. The thimbleberry or black raspberry was no improvement. Third, the blackberry which wants shade, and is not a successful berry to raise, and the speaker related the experience of some of his neighbors, and spoke of the fungus on the vines and the impregnating of the land itself with it. Fourth, the strawberry, which takes best in the market and also takes the sugar, as it is estimated that 50,000 lbs. of sugar is used during the season. There were 830 varieties described by one author and out of that number only one is cultivated to-day successfully.

The best berry to raise here is the Chas. Downing, although other kinds have been raised with profit. To prepare for a strawberry bed, you should have the ground in good condition; any ground that will grow corn will also grow strawberries, or a gravelly, sandy soil, and the plants should be set 4x1 feet. The following statistics showing the difference in crops is of interest:

	Winter bushels	Spring bushels	Val. per acre
Wheat	17	11	$18.00
Corn	26		11.20
Oats	27.6		9 96
Barley	12		16.40
Rye	13		10.60
Buckwheat	16		11.37
Potatoes	56		46.08
Hay	1.22 tons		13.74
Rice	603 pounds		25.00
Cotton	1 3 bale		15.00
Southern Corn	8		3.45
Average crop of Strawberries boxes, 13 cts.	1000		130.00

Mr. Needham was followed by several gentlemen, who asked him various questions.

Capt. Geo. Taylor advised all not to send away and buy plants, as they are apt to die and usually lose their health before they arrive; he had paid $3.00 a hundred for the Downing and saved only one of them. Mr. T. also took up the other fruits and discussed their merits. Rev. Mr. Spaulding said he did not like to see a wilderness of flowers, but he liked to see a few about every residence, a few trees around every home; in fact there should be a home market in every house and every farmer should supply his own market. The speaker took up the different fruits and in conclusion admonished his hearers to make their own table as good as they could make it. The subject for the next meeting will be a Review of the town report, to be opened by Rev. W. G. Spaulding, who will be followed by Jas. P. King, J. S. Needham and others. This is only a pleasant discussion of town affairs and will be quite interesting.

There was a very enjoyable Sunday School concert at the school house hall, at 5 o'clock, P. M., last Sunday, conducted by Rev. Mr. Colwell. The recitations of Scripture and sacred poetry were excellently rendered. The singing was spirited. Wm. Siner, Jr., the former superintendent, was present and addressed the school. A goodly number was present.

Rev. Dr. Steele preached last Sabbath for the last time to his people in this town, the three years allotted to the service as pastor by the Conference of his church having expired. Dr. Steele preached on the itinerant system, showing its advantages both to the pastor and people. Monday evening a sociable was held in the vestry at which friends not only in the Methodist but other evangelical churches in this town participated. Short addresses were made by Rev. Mr. Sperry, Deacon Richard Smith, Mary J. Floyd, Isaac Drown and Dr. Steele. An original poem on itineracy was read by Mrs. Steele. A social time was enjoyed by all, amid hearty expressions of good will towards Dr. Steele in his future labors.

K. M. Jarvis sends us a good sized bundle of St. Louis papers, for which we are greatly obliged.

A Perfect Combination with two Salient Advantages—Why it Concerns You.

"There is no mistake about it" remarked Dr. M. F. Flowers, of Gallatin, Missouri, "BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS are one of the nearest combinations ever produced. They have two kinds of advantages over all others, which we may call the minor and the major.—First, they are clean and pleasant to use, never soiling the hands nor the linen of the wearer.—Second, they act quickly and powerfully. I have tried the Capcine Plaster on myself for pneumonia, and on my patients for various diseases, such as Neuralgia, Muscular Rheumatism, Lumbago, Kidney Trouble, etc., and in all cases relief has followed in from three to forty-eight hours.

Dr. Flower merely voices the written or oral opinion of thousands in his profession. BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS are the perfect external application. The genuine have the word CAPCINE cut in the centre. Price 25 c. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York.

Miscellaneous.

THE DARK DAY IN CANADA.

In some interesting and graphic reminiscences of Montreal sixty years ago, Mr. J. H. Dorwin writes to the Montreal Star as follows: "What was the strangest occurrence of that time, or rather the strangest thing that ever happened in the history of this country, was what has always been known as the 'Phenomenon of 1819.' On the morning of Sunday, November 8, 1819, the sun rose upon a cloudy sky, which assumed, as the light grew upon it, a strange greenish tint, varying in places to an inky blackness. After a short time the whole sky became terribly dark, dense clouds filling the atmosphere, and there followed a heavy shower of rain, which appeared to be something of the nature of soapsuds, and was found to have deposited after settling a substance in all its qualities resembling soot. Late in the afternoon the sky cleared to its natural aspect, and the next day was fine and frosty. On the morning of Tuesday, the 10th, heavy clouds again covered the sky, and changed rapidly from a deep green to a pitchy black, and the sun, when occasionally seen through them, was sometimes of a dark brown or an unearthly yellow color, and again bright orange, and even blood red. The clouds constantly deepened in color and density, and later on a heavy vapor seemed to descend to the earth, and the day became almost as dark as night, the gloom increasing and diminishing most fitfully. At noon lights had to be burned in the court-house, the banks and public offices of the city. Everybody was more or less alarmed, and many were the conjectures as to the cause of the remarkable occurrence. The more sensible thought the immense woods or prairies were on fire somewhere to the west; others said that a great volcano must have broken out in the Province; still others asserted that our mountain was an extinct crater about to resume operations and to make of the city a second Pompeii; the superstitions quoted an old Indian prophecy that one day the Island of Montreal was to be destroyed by an earthquake, and some even cried that the world was about to come to an end. About the middle of the afternoon a great body of clouds seemed to rush suddenly over the city, and the darkness became that of night. A pause and hush for a moment or two succeeded, and then one of the most glaring flashes of lightning ever beheld flamed over the country, accompanied by a clap of thunder which seemed to shake the city to its foundations. Another pause followed, and then came a light shower of rain of the same soapy nature as that of two days before. After that it appeared to grow brighter, but an hour later it was as dark as ever. Another rush of clouds came, and another vivid flash of lightning, which was seen to strike the spire of the old French parish church and to play curiously about the large iron cross at its summit before descending to the ground. A moment later came the climax of the day. Every bell in the city suddenly rung out the alarm of fire, and the affrighted citizens rushed out from their houses into the streets and made their way in the gloom toward the church, until Place d'Armes was crowded with people, their nerves all unstrung by the awful events of the day, gazing at, but scarcely daring to approach the strange sight before them. The sky above and around was as black as ink, but right in one spot in mid-air above them was the summit of the spire, with the lightning playing about it shining like a sun. Directly the great iron cross, together with the ball at its foot, fell to the ground with a crash and was shivered to pieces. But the darkest hour comes just before the dawn. The glow above gradually subsided and died out, the people grew less fearful and returned to their homes, the real night came on, and when next morning dawned everything was bright and clear, and the world was as natural as before. The phenomenon was noticed in a greater or less degree from Quebec to Kingston and far into the States, but Montreal seemed its center. It has never yet been explained."

WHY SHE MARRIED?

Though I did dread marriage, and shunned men's companies as much as I could, yet I could not, nor had not, the power to refuse him—by reason my affections were fix'd on him, and he was the only Person I ever was in love with. Neither was I ashamed to own it, but gloried therein; for it was not Amorous Love, I never was infected therewith; it is a Disease or a Paesion, or both, I only know by relation, not by experience; neither could Title, Wealth, Power or Person entice me to love; but my Love was honest and honorable, being placed upon Merit, which Affection joy'd at the fame of his worth, pleased with delight in his Wit, proud of the respects he used to me, and triumphed in the Affections he profest for me, which Affections he hath confirmed to me by a deed of time, seal'd by Constancy, and assigned by an unalterable decree of his promise which makes me happy in dispight of Fortune's frowns. For though Misfortunes may and do often dissolve base, wi.de, loose and ungrounded Affections, yet she hath no power of those that are united either by Merit, Justice, Gratitude, Duty, Fidelity, or the like; and though my Lord hath lost his estate and banish'd out of his Country for his Loyalty to his King and Country, yet neither despised Poverty nor pinching Necessity could make him break the bonds of Friendship, nor weaken his Loyal Duty to his King and Country.—Nature's Pictures, Duchess of Newcastle.

TO PLEASE HER HUSDAND

Were the words of a Good Lady, Mrs. Hawkins, who has long suffered from the pain common to Chronic Rheumatism. A Woman's Patience and Fortitude Well Shown.

Your reporter found Mrs. Hawkins at 14 Exchange St., New Haven, Conn. "About four years ago," she said, "I was then a resident of Brooklyn, N. Y. I went over one morning to the Jersey City depot to see some friends off who were starting for the west.—There was a strong draft of air in the depot, and in standing by the train talking to my friends I caught a severe cold. I had no more than reached my home again when I was taken with a sudden chill and then fever set in. The outcome of all was that rheumatism settled all over me. I was entirely helpless. From this I have never recovered.—You see my hands what a state they are in. Those are all chalky swellings and my limbs are very bad. While I remained in Brooklyn I tried all sorts of remedies, but I could never gain any relief. My physician said it was no use. I grew very thin and lost all strength. Finally, after coming here, to gratify my husband, I began to take Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY, and my general health has been better than ever before I am stronger, have an excellent appetite, which I did not have for a long time. It has helped my rheumatism, and with a thorough trial I am in hopes of recovering completely."

Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY has been successfully used by thousands. It will build up a system that has been run down by overwork. It is the thing for the student and literary man to have at hand, and should be in the home of every mechanic. FAVORITE REMEDY is economical, safe and pleasant. Buy it and try it.

KEEP YOUR SCALP CLEAN.

The best thing out for removing Dandruff is

HEYLINGBERG'S

EUREKA DANDRUFF REMOVER.

It has been thoroughly tested by hundreds of gentlemen, Ladies, and Children, and we have plenty of testimonials of its good results. It is cooling, removes Dandruff, invigorates the roots of the hair, and will quickly produce a strong and beautiful growth in all cases where the roots of the hair are not fully dead, and will stop this unpleasant itching; in fact it is the best hair dressing in use. It is not greasy or sticky, and is warranted free of all oils, and poisins, and will prove the cleanest, safest and most economical Hair Dressing to be found.

Peabody, Mass., Nov. 18, 1881.

Mr. J. J. Heylingberg, Dear Sir:—Both myself and wife have used your Eureka Dandruff Remover for some time, with the most satisfactory results, and recommend it as being indispensable for the toilet. Yours truly,

FRANK A. BRAGDON.

Many more testimonials furnished if desired.

Persons suffering from diseases of the scalp will be attended at the house when desired.

ONE FOOL AMONG MANY.

WRECKED BY HIS UNTEMPERED AMBITION.—A LIGHTHOUSE ON THE SHOALS.

"I ought to have stopped five years before I did; but I thought it wouldn't amount to anything, so I kept on. I was a fool, of course—but who isn't, when ambition and the chance of making money spurs him on? I only hope I shall get well enough to digest another square meal sometime without a rebellion in my stomach."

The speaker was one of the best known civil engineers and mining experts in this country; hardy by nature as a buffalo, but broken down by hard study and the merciless lashing administered to his mind and body by his own hand during the earlier part of his career. At fifty he is prematurely gray, bent in form and dispirited. Dyspepsia did it—Dyspepsia, the self-inflicted curse of the American in every department of toil.

"I am thirty five years old," writes Mr Charles H. Watts, of West Somers, Putnam County, N. Y., "and had suffered from dyspepsia for fifteen years. Tried everything.—At last gave PARKER'S GINGER TONIC a chance to show what it could do for me. It proved its ability by curing me. I recommend it to all who are suffering from this terrible desease." Mr. G.R.Cole, druggist, of Carmel, N. Y., certifies to the truth of Mr. Watts' statement.

Gloom, despondency, hopelessness, disgust with all labor, sleeplessness, horrid dreams to render bed-time like the hour of execution to a criminal—these are some of Dyspepsia's foot prints. The Dyspeptic knows what Coleridge meant when he said: "Night is my hell." PARLER'S GINGER TONIC cures Dyspepsia, purifies the Blood, disperses Rheumatism and all chronic ailments. Prices, 50 cents and $1 a bottle. Hiscox & Co., New York.

COUNTY COMM'RS' NOTICE.

Peabody, March 19th, 1883.

To the Honorable Board of County Commissioners for the County of Essex.

The undersigned respectfully represent, that the public convenience and necessity require that that part of Washington street in Peabody between the northwesterly corner of the estate of Stephen Blaney and the dwelling house belonging to Mrs. Franklin Osborne, Jr., should be widened; also that Lynn street should be widened and straightened, at a point some distance southerly of the dwelling house of Samuel K. Newhall.

We therefore petition your honorable body to view the premises and to take such action in the matter as the public convenience and necessity may seem to you to require.

Miscellaneous.

THE ART AMATEUR for April, contains working designs of oak-leaves for a vase and aristolochia vine for a panel, a variety of ecclesiastical and South Kensington embroidery designs, and a second page of monograms in A. An interesting biography of Alma Tadema is accompanied by numerous illustrations of that artist's work, including a large engraving of "Sunday Morning," and another of "A Parting Kiss." Especially interesting are the illustrated accounts of the famous Jones collection in London, and of "A Wood Carver's Home"—the exquisitely decorated house of Mr. Benn Pitman at Cincinnati. There are also valuable articles on book cases (by Arthur Penn), china painting (by Miss McLaughlin), fancy ball costumes, dining rooms and other practical topics. French paintings in New York are discussed editorially. "My Note Book" is full, as usual, of pungent paragraphs, and in every respect this number well maintains the high standard which The Art Amateur has set for itself. Price 35 cents; $4 a year. Montague Marks, publisher, 23 Union Square, New York.

KEY TO "BOSTON INSIDE OUT."—"Key and Sequel to Boston Inside Out, Catholic Church in Politics; For Sale or To Let," will be issued May 1st, 250 pages, price $1.00. Agents have it at 50 cts. Sample copies of "Boston Inside Out," (20th thousand, nearly 800 sold in the city of Lynn alone,) 552 pages, gilt cover, with steel portrait of the author, half price, 75 cents in stamps. Retail price $1.50. Address Rev. Henry Morgan, 81 Shawmut avenue, Boston, Mass.

We have received the last number of the Modern Stenographic Journal, an excellent shorthand magazine published by the Modern Stenographic Co., Buffalo, N. Y. The February and March numbers were combined, together making a very interesting number. The subscription price is $2.00; single copies, 20 cents.

The "Press," a Temperance paper published at No. 10 Federal St., Boston makes the following offer of prizes with the purpose it is said of enlisting young people in the Temperance work;

Ten dollars for the best short article on The Village Saloon.

Six dollars for the best short article on Temperance Work, and how the Young Folks may help.

Five dollars for the best short article on Ought Boys to Smoke?

Four dollars for the best short article on What Drinking costs.

These contributions must be original, and must not exceed four hundred words each in length. The writer must be under sixteen years of age, and a subscriber; or the paper taken by one of the family. The articles must be submitted on or before June 16, 1883.

Each manuscript must be accompanied by the name, age, and address of the writer, in a sealed envelope, which will not be opened by us until a decision has been made.

The Holly Tree Inn, on Central street has been enlarged by the addition of a room, which has been fitted in tasteful style. The Inn can now dine seventy-five guests at once. The Holly Tree is a great convenience, and the plan of serving good food well cooked, at low prices, has become very popular with our own people, as well as with visitors to the city. If a man or woman wants only a lunch, it is not necessary to pay for a state dinner. Mr. Porter, in connection with his dining room and market, has inaugurated a system of furnishing families with ready cooked meals, so that a family in summer can have their meals delivered cooked at but a slight per cent, advance over the cost of the raw material.—Salem Reg.

"I'm a reporter," said an unsalted youth to the baggage-master, as he planked himself down on a hand-truck near the car. "Got anything new for me?" "Oh, I upset a can of varnish on that car just before you sat down, but as the item is already covered it will be stale before you can get at it." The news-gatherer was pried off with a coupling-pin and sent home by slow freight.—Travelers' Magazine.

An elder was cramped with an ache,
St. Jacobs Oil did the pain slake;
He was so highly pleased,
That again he was greased,
And took a lot home to Salt Lake.

A soldier on guard at Fort Wayne,
Was suddenly stricken with pain,
He thought he was gone,
But when he rubbed on
St. Jacobs Oil, was all right again.

A country cousin found himself seated at one of our hotel tables, probably for the first time, and the table girl, desirous of ascertaining the extent to which he preferred his steak cooked, propounded the usual question of "how do you like it?" Of course there wasn't any smiling around that board when the answer was returned, with all the simplicity imaginable: "O, I like it fust-rate."—Laconia, N. H., Tocsin.

The Boston Daily Advertiser has added a very important feature to its ship news department, giving news by cable from the commercial centres of the world, thereby rendering it more valuable than ever to the shipping interest.

For Dyspepsia, Costiveness, Sick Headache, Chronic Diarrhœa, Jaundice, Impurity of the Blood, Fever and Ague, Malaria, and all Diseases caused by Derangement of Liver, Bowels and Kidneys.

SYMPTOMS OF A DISEASED LIVER.

Bad Breath; Pain in the Side, sometimes the pain is felt under the Shoulder-blade, mistaken for Rheumatism; general loss of appetite; Bowels generally costive, sometimes alternating with lax; the head is troubled with pain, is dull and heavy, with considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of leaving undone something which ought to have been done; a slight, dry cough and flushed face is sometimes an attendant, often mistaken for consumption; the patient complains of weariness and debility; nervous, easily startled; feet cold or burning, sometimes a prickly sensation of the skin exists; spirits are low and despondent, and, although satisfied that exercise would be beneficial, yet one can hardly summon up fortitude to try it—in fact, distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred when but few of them existed, yet examination after death has shown the Liver to have been extensively deranged.

It should be used by all persons, old and young, whenever any of the above symptoms appear.

Persons Traveling or Living in Unhealthy Localities, by taking a dose occasionally to keep the Liver in healthy action, will avoid all Malaria, Bilious attacks, Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Depression of Spirits, etc. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage.

If You have eaten anything hard of digestion, or feel heavy after meals, or sleepless at night, take a dose and you will be relieved.

Time and Doctors' Bills will be saved by always keeping the Regulator in the House!

For, whatever the ailment may be, a thoroughly safe purgative, alterative and tonic can never be out of place. The remedy is harmless and does not interfere with business or pleasure.

IT IS PURELY VEGETABLE,

And has all the power and efficacy of Calomel or Quinine, without any of the injurious after effects.

A Governor's Testimony.

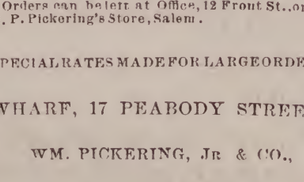
Simmons Liver Regulator has been in use in my family for some time, and I am satisfied it is a valuable addition to the medical science.

J. GILL SHORTER, Governor of Ala.

Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, of Ga., says: Have derived some benefit from the use of Simmons Liver Regulator, and wish to give it a further trial.

"The only Thing that never fails to Relieve."—I have used many remedies for Dyspepsia, Liver Affection and Debility, but never have found anything to benefit me to the extent Simmons Liver Regulator has. I sent from Minnesota to Georgia for it, and would send further for such a medicine, and would advise all who are similarly affected to give it a trial as it seems the only thing that never fails to relieve.

P. M. JANNEY, Minneapolis, Minn.



Dr. T. W. Mason says: From actual experience in the use of Simmons Liver Regulator in my practice I have been and am satisfied to use and prescribe it as a purgative medicine.

SHAKER LINIMENT.

Shaker Liniment

CURES

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Inflammations, Lame Back, Enlarged Glands, Toothache, Croup, Sprains, Chronic Diseases of the Joints and Muscles, Bruises, Gout, Quinsy, Sore Throat, Swellings. Frosted Feet, Chilblains, and all Diseases of an Inflammatory Nature.

Recommended by Physicians.

Dr. W. C. Sylvester says: "I have examined the formula of the Shaker Liniment, and I use it in my family and recommend it to all sufferers from Neuralgia and Rheumatism. It is better than any other Liniment."

A. Hanson, Boston Wire Works, 75 to 81 Cornhill, says: "My wife was cured of Neuralgia—Four applications cured me of Rheumatism, and Mr. Lord, my neighbor, who has been on crutches fifteen years, obtained relief from less than one bottle of the Shaker Liniment."

Chas. Prescott, Merchant, Randolph, says: "Send me three dozen Shaker Liniment. My customers have confidence in it, and I can consistently recommend it."

Dr. U. K. Mayo, 378 Tremont street, says: "It is the most effective remedy that ever came to my notice, and I cheerfully recommend it."

An Old Nurse says: "If the directions are followed, not one case of croup in a thousand will prove fatal."

J. F. Sawtell, 124 Cambridge street, was cured of Rheumatism, and says: "The Shaker Liniment cured me, and I would advise Rheumatics to use it."

The Boston Traveller says: "Such cures (Mr. Sawtell's) place The Shaker Liniment at the head of all Rheumatic remedies."

Mrs. C. A. Sylvester of the Sawin Academy Sherborn, who was cured of Neuralgia of the heart, says: "Its effects are almost magical. I will cheerfully recommend it to my friends."

E. N. Cummings, the well known Sunday-school worker, formerly of Woburn, now of the firm of Welsh & Cummings', Lynn, says: "The Shaker Liniment cured my wife of an Enlarged Joint, and myself of Acute Inflammation."

C. H. Lewis, Framingham, says: "It gave me quick relief for Rheumatism, and it is the best liniment that I ever used."

Hon. A. Maynard, the extensive manufacturer and founder of the town of Maynard, Mass., who was cured of Neuralgia, says: "By the use of the Shaker Liniment I obtained almost immediate relief and unhesitatingly recommend it to my friends."

L. H. Allen, Station Agent at Rocklestion, says: "I rebelved decided benefit from the Shaker Liniment for Rheumatism, and I have not heard of a case of Neuralgia or Rheumatism that it has not benefitted."

L. J. Jeffs, the well known manufacturer of Hudson and Boston, says: "I have seen such results at the effects of the Shaker Liniment for Neuralgia that I heartily recommend it."

J. E. Brearton, Manager of the "Golden Rule," says: "The Shaker Liniment gave me immediate relief. It is a wonderful remedy."

Sermons in Stones.

"LET'S TALK OF GRAVES AND EPITAPHS."

In a late number of a local journal, the following epitaph is quoted from "The Interior," and is said to have been copied from a stone in a New England graveyard:—

"Here lies John Auricular,
Who in the ways of the Lord walked perpendicular."

The editor of the journal doubts whether such an inscription ever existed, and whether a Yankee ever lived with such a name as John Auricular. Why! John Auricular is music to the ear when compared with many of the names given by Mr. Bowditch in "Suffolk Surnames," and by Bardsley in his "Curiosities of Puritan Nomenclature;" and as for the epitaph, any New England burial ground that is a hundred years old will furnish epitaphs as quaint and curious as the one quoted.

Oliver Wendell Holmes in writing upon this subject, calls attention to the old burial ground in Dorchester, Massachusetts, where great stones, that are still seen, were "laid upon the graves to keep the wolves from acting like hyenas." He says: "I make a pilgrimage to it from time to time to see that little Submit sleeps in peace, and read the tender lines that soothed the heart of the Pilgrim mother two hundred years ago or more:"—

"Submit submitted to her heavenly king,
Zeing a flower of that œtornal spring,
Neare 3 yeares old she dyed in heaven to waite,
The yeare was sixteen hundred 48."

At Copp's Hill, Boston, may be seen the following, inscribed upon a stone bearing the name of Mrs. Ammy Hunt, who died in 1767:—

"A sister of Sarah Lucas lyeth here;
Whom I did love most dear;
And now her soul hath took its flight,
And bid her spightful foes good night."

In the same yard near the front gate, a broken slab has this inscription:—

"James Seward, grandson of James and Catherine Seward, died Sept. 27, 1792, aet 6 months.
He bore a lingering sickness with patience and met the King of Terrors with a smile."

Captain Henry Newman, who hung the lights in the tower of the old North Church on the night of the memorable ride of Paul Revere "through every Middlesex village and farm," was buried at Copp's Hill, and the slab of slate over his grave has this breezy epitaph:—

"Though Neptune's waves and Boreas' blasts
Have tossed me to and fro,
Now well escaped from all their rage,
I'm anchored here below.

Safely I'll ride in triumph here
With many of our fleet,
Till signals call to weigh again,
Our Admiral, Christ, to meet.

O, may all those I've left behind
Be washed in Jesus' blood,
And when they leave this world of sin
Be ever with their Lord."

It is difficult to understand the feeling that could have prompted any one to put this verse from the Bible over the grave of relative or friend, but it is to be found at Burial Hill, Plymouth:—

"The fathers have eaten sour grapes and the children's teeth are set on edge."

One cannot refrain from thinking of the passage in Ezekiel where the word of the Lord came unto that prophet, saying: "What mean ye that ye use this proverb concerning the land of Israel."

The following are also from Burial Hill:—

"F. W. JACKSON.
obit
March 13, 1799.
AGED
One year and seven days,
Heaven knows what man
He might have made. But we
He died a most rare boy."

"FANNY CROMBIE.
8 years old.
Died June 25, 1804.
As young as beautiful, and soft as young, and gay as soft, and innocent as gay."

MRS. TABITHA PLASKETT.
64 years.
Adieu vain world, I have seen enough of thee
And I am careless what thou sayest of me.
Thy smiles I wish not,
Nor thy frowns I fear,
I am now at rest, my head lies quiet here."

The two which follow are from the burial ground in Spencer, Massachusetts:—

"Death caused by swallowing the top of an umbrel rib into the lungs. He lived seven weeks and expired."

"When I lie mouldering in the grave,
No mother will my children have,
They'll go crying after me,
Oh! where is marm where can she be?"

Henry James Loaring is my authority for this inscription, which he says is to be found in an ancient cemetery in Rockville, Massachusetts:—

"In memory of Jane Bent,
Who kicked up her heels and away she went."

Two from New Jersey:—

"Weep stranger, for a father spill'd
From a stage-coach and thereby kill'd;
His name was John Sykes, a maker of sassengers, Slain with three other outside passengers."

"JULIA ADAMS.
Died of thin shoes, April 17, 1839, aged 19 years."

In Christ Churchyard, Alexandria, Virginia, on a young man who died in 1773:—

"His father was a respectable merchant and his grandfather an eminent distiller."

The Elginbrodde epitaph, that George Macdonald uses in his story of David Elginbrod, seems at first sight, to be fictitious, but it is to be found in an Edinburgh Churchyard, and in a little different form, is to be seen on a tombstone in Germany, as we are told by Dr. Holmes.

Here is George Macdonald's version:

"Here lie I, Martin Elginbrodde,
Have mercy on my soul, Lord God,
As I would do, were I Lord God,
An' ye were Martin Elginbrodde."

It is quite a strain upon our credulity to think that any one of the following epitaphs is actually inscribed upon a tombstone, but there is good authority for believing in their existence.

At Pewsey, in Bedfordshire:—

"Here lies the body of Lady O'Looney,
Great niece of Burke, commonly called the Sublime.
She was
Bland, passionate, and deeply religious;
Also she painted in water colours,
And sent several pictures to the Exhibition.
She was first cousin to Lady Jones,
And of such is the kingdom of heaven.

On a wife, Manchester, England:—

"She once was mine; and now
To thee O Lord, I her resign;
And am your obedient, humble servant,
Robert Kemp."

In the churchyard of Upton-on-Severn:—

"Beneath this stone, in hope of Zion,
Doth lie the landlord of the 'Lion,'
His son keeps on the business still,
Resigned unto the Heavenly will."

In Guilsfield churchyard, on David Williams, 1769:—

"Under this yew-tree,
Buried would he be,
Because his father—he Planted this yew-tree."

In Bampton, Devonshire:—

"Bless my i, i, i, i, i, i, i,
Here I lies.
In a sad pickle,
Killed by icicle
In the year Anno Domini 1776."

At Bedford, Devon:—

"Here lies two brothers, by misfortune surrounded,
One died of his wounds, and the other was drownded."

In Homersfield churchyard, Suffolk, on Robert Crytoft, died 1810, aged 90:—

"As I walked by myself I talked to myself.
And thus myself said to me,
Look to thyself, and take care of thyself,
For nobody cares for thee.

So I turned to myself, and I answered myself,
In the self-same reverie;
Look to thyself, or look not to thyself,
The self same thing will be."

But the graves "with uncouth rhymes and shapeless sculpture decked" are exceptions everywhere.

Said an early New England writer: "It is the desire of immortality inwrought into the very heart of man that produced the invention of epitaphs," and, following the example of the pupils of Linus, who bewailed the loss of their slain master in elegant verse, poets and scholars all along the ages have vied with each other in furnishing "these cementing links between the past, the present, and the future."

The epitaph written by Plato on his friend Stella, preserved among the writings of Laertius and afterwards copied by Shelley at the beginning of his "Elegy on the Death of Keats," is a good specimen of the elegant in epitaphs:—

"You shone, while living, a morning star; but dead, you shine Hesperus among the shades."

Ben Jonson wrote the following on the Countess of Pembroke:—

"Underneath this gable hearse
Lies the subject of all verse,
Sidney's sister, Pembroke's mother,
Death! ere thou hast found another
Learned, fair, and good as she,
Time shall throw a dart at thee."

Coming down to our own time, the inscription written by President Eliot of Harvard College, for the Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument in Boston, is a model of simple, terse English, and the same can be truly said of the epitaph written by Professor Park as a tender tribute to the memory of the long-time principal of Phillips Academy, in Andover.

As a fitting conclusion to these notes let me give you the epitaph on Adam written by Gabriel Alvarez and published by him in his "Historia Ecclesiac Antediluvianæ," Madrid, 1713:—

"Here lies reduced to a pinch of dust, he who from a pinch of dust was formed to govern the earth,
Adam,
The son of None, the father of All, the stepfather of All and of himself.
Having never wailed as a child, he spent his life in weeping, the result of penitence.
Powerful, Wise, Immortal, Just, he sold for the price of disobedience, power, wisdom, justice, immortality.

Having abused the privilege of Free-will, which weapon he had received for the preservation of Knowledge and Grace, by one stroke he struck with death himself and all the human race.
The Omnipotent Judge
Who in His Justice took from him Righteousness, by His Mercy restored it to him whole again; by whose goodness it has fallen out, that we may call that crime happy which obtained such and so great A Redeemer.

Thenceforth Free-will, which be in happiness used to bring forth Misery, is used in Misery to bring forth Happiness.
For if we, partakers of his pernicious inheritance, partake also of his penitential example, and lend our ears to salutary counsels,
Then we (who by our Free-will could lose ourselves) can be saved by the grace of the Redeemer, and the cooperation of our Free-will.

The First Adam Lived te Die;
The Second Adam died to Live.
Go and imitate the penitence of the First Adam;
Go and celebrate the goodness of the Second Adam."

KIRK MANAHAN.

A PROTEST. We desire to join hands with the Milford Gazette and others of our exchanges, in their protests against the rates offered by advertising agents representing sewing machine, organ and piano companies, etc. We also desire to add to the list the patent medicine advertising agent.—[Natick Citizen.

The Citizen proposes the formation of a society for the refusal of all the absurdly low priced and ridiculously high conditioned advertising offered by the patent medicine and other cranks that infest the land. We don't recognize the need of any organization to effect the desired result. Each newspaper publisher has the remedy in his own hands, and it is easy to apply. Take no notice of their communications until they offer a fair price for what they want, and then accept or reject their offers just as you would the offer of one of your own home customers.—[Marlboro Times.

Still we believe that the only successful way to fully meet the emergency is for the newspapers to combine, and for our own part we would be glad to see some action taken in the matter.—[Milford Gazette.

We agree with the Gazette. So long as there are found papers, and we regret to say the majority of them, who will accept these propositions at any price, what can one paper or even a dozen do in getting better prices? They can refuse the offer, it is true. But so long as the agents find plenty of publishers to take them, no good will be accomplished. Will the Gazette take the initiative in the matter?

Our readers will note the advertisement of Thos. Cook & Sons, the veteran excursionists of the country. A trip under their management is proposed to California, and their reputation for making satisfactory arrangements for the macoomodation of tourists is of the very best. They not only run an extended series of tours in this country but also in Europe. A pamphlet giving all the information necessary will be sent on application. See their advertisement in another column.

WEST PEABODY.

The regular meeting of the West Peabody Farmers' Club last Friday evening had for its subject the Town Report. After singing by the Chorus Club, Rev. Willard Spaulding was introduced as the speaker of the evening. He began by saying there was a peculiar flavor to the last report. He believed that all departments of the town should be properly attended to; we must have good roads, and good schools; there should be no half way policy; all that was done should be well done; should be fair recommendations, and as the town increased in wealth, its legitimate expenses would increase, and in equal proportion. He did not know why, however, they should increase more than that. Our rate of taxation is in excess of that of Boston. Are not our expenses outrunning our population and valuation? We are making haste and leaving a chasm growing between the expenses of the town and the increase of population. The speaker proceeded to compare the valuation as given in the report of 1873 and the last report, and this was the basis of all the comparisons made by Mr. Spaulding during the evening. The last valuation was $6,611,500; in 1873, $5,938,950, an increase of about 12 per cent. In 1873 the valuation of real estate was $3.421,850; of personal, $2,517,100. In 1883, real estate, $4,219.600; personal, $2,396,550. This is a notable increase in value of real estate, and a decrease in personal property. Part of this is to be accounted for by the recent law; that mortgage notes may not be taxed. There is probably as much personal estate in town as in 1873, but it cannot be found for taxation. Real estate lies out of doors, and can easily be found. It always has to bear the burden of taxation. The net indebtedness of the town in 1873 was $141,000, in 1883, $363,000. The gain in valuation is 12 per cent.; the increase in debt nearly 300 per cent. At some time we shall find ourselves limited at the amount of the town debt. This is so only in one sense. All the assessors have to do is to double the valuation, and if after ten years they want more money, they can double the valuation again, so that, in reality there is no limit. If we keep on in this ratio for the next ten years, what will be the result? Our tax will be over $200,000 and our indebtedness over $600,000; in twenty years our tax would be a round half a million, and our debt millions. We may well pause and consider if there is not some call for retrenchment and reform.

Mr. Spaulding then proceeded to take up different portions of the report, as they appeared on the face. Yet, said the speaker, they have never been audited; don't know as they have been since the division of the town. A man cannot audit his own account; he cannot pronounce upon his own integrity and honor. The town officers audit their own reports. There has been no auditing done that has not been done by inside parties. The speaker had spoken of this matter, inquiring of one of the officials why this was not done by a trained accountant, and was told there was not a man in town that could do it. All the learning in Peabody can not raise up a man competent for this work. The day has fully come when there should be a thorough auditing of the town reports. They may be right—they were as far as he was concerned. But he urged the people not to pass another year without the selection of an independent and trained auditor to look over the books. The indebtedness of the sinking funds was next referred to. He found here corresponding blundering, and a trace of artfulness. In reference to the indebtedness the first item as mentioned is so many four per cent. notes; the following 5 per cent.; 5 1-2 and 6 per cent.; and $100,000 of 7 per cent. notes, in this year of grace 1883. When any town with the credit of Peabody must pay 7 per cent., there must be something wrong. They were given in 1873. (Here Mr. King explained that they had not matured.) Mr. Spaulding asked who held them, and when they did mature, but he was unable to be answered. He said it was unwise to borrow money for so long a period at 7 per cent. It were better to pay even 10 per cent. for one year. What kind of financiering was that? He thought there was a trace of acidity here. In regard to the sinking fund, Mr. Spaulding said the town had no sinking fund in reality; a man cannot pay a debt due to himself. The town owes a sinking fund $49,000; that sinking fund is the town itself. When the town pays the sinking fund, the sinking fund will pay it back to the town. We have, however, proved that a town can owe itself. There is another thing connected with the sinking fund. There is a treasurer for it. He receives $100 for his services. Mr. Poor is the treasurer. It is not a large sum. But considering the work done and the pay received, is it not worth having? There is some milk in this cocoanut. They turned you out (here the speaker pointed to Mr. Walcott, who sat directly in front of him,) because they did not get their money's worth. Are we getting our money's worth here? It does not take him 1-1000 part of a second to perform the duties. Is there not occasion for applying the probing knife? Shall we not lay the axe at the root of this town tree? There is a twig that has no business to be there. It yields no fruit. We owe $49,000 less than is given in the report. A town cannot owe itself. The speaker believed we had no sinking fund, as he had shown.

There had been a reform in the finances somewhat. For instance, he found that the Warren Bank had allowed the town one year $300 for interest, another year over $500 and last year $600 — about $1500 in the last three years. He could find no such allowance for any preceding years, yet that bank has had the money of the town on deposit since its beginning. It has had the benefit of the town's money for twenty-five years or more. The town has not received a dollar of interest previous to the last three years, and money was worth 7 per cent., yet the Warren Bank had all the money for just nothing at all. The speaker granted that it is not customary or expected that deposits in National Banks shall draw interest. But if the town had looked around, they could have found some place where they could have secured a reasonable interest,—if the Warren Bank would not pay it they could have withdrawn it. The speaker did not blame the bank, but thought the town should have shown more financial energy.

Mr. Spaulding next referred to the premiums paid on taxes handed in to obtain the 3 per cent. discount, amounting last year to $2,900. $100,000 had been paid in before Oct. 1st; all the well-to-do men rush up to pay their taxes, leaving only a beggarly amount $16,000 to stir about to collect. A premium of $2900 was paid. It is nothing less than abatement of the rich man's tax, while to the taxes of those who do not pay interest is added. Why abate the tax of Farmer King? why offer a premium for prompt payment, when it is as certain to be paid as the sun to rise and set? He would have no more abatement of the taxes of the rich. He would have a day appointed before which the taxes should be paid, after which, if not paid, interest should be charged, and if not paid at a certain later date, higher interest and then collect them by legal process, if it must be. But he would have equality in this matter. The speaker next considered the salaries of the officers. He said he should bear in mind the injunction not to speak evil of dignitaries. The salaries of the town officers in 1873 was $3260.19; in 1883, $3956.00; an increase of salaries of $686.81; if to this is added the salary of the clerk of the water board it makes $1086.89 more than in 1873. One of these officers is town clerk, treasurer, treasurer of the sinking fund, selectman and assessor, and if there were fifty other offices with fat salaries he might be persuaded to accept them and find ample time to attend to their duties. He thought the service of the clerk of the water board could just as well be performed by him. Our clerk formerly received $500—now $800; the treasurer for a series of years only $50—now $300; the Selectmen for many years altogether received no more than is now paid the chairman. (Here a gentleman in the hall asked Mr. Spaulding if the same line of argument did not apply to ministers, teachers and others.) The speaker said that while the expenses of the schools was greater, there was no increase in the salaries of the teachers; thought the hardest worked and poorest paid servants in the town were the female teachers, receiving from $300 to $500 and requiring vastly more of intelligence than is required to fill the offices of the town. In regard to ministers, Mr. Spaulding granted that forty-nine out of every fifty received more pay than they were worth. There were five selectmen; he thought three better than five; the other two were no better than the fifth wheel of the coach. All five of them have spent days tugging at these figures in the reports. $3.00 a day was not a large pay, but it was more than any one of them could earn in his legitimate business. Thought $2 50 per day was enough. He did not believe in this annual pushing up of salaries. The collector of taxes, who is also selectman and assessor, receives $500. Mr. Spaulding thought $300 enough. He would cut down the salaries—reduce the number of selectmen — thought $500 enough for the pay of the town clerk, and $50 for town treasurer, and that plenty of capable men could be found to fill these offices at these salaries. Incidentally Mr. Spaulding referred to the school department which he claimed was doing its work nobly and well.

He would not criticize the road department, but the town had opened the question. He believed in watchfulness; didn't care if they put a spy over this department: would have a spy over all the officers, to know whether they attend to the town business. The town voted to expend $600 dollars in his vicinity if, in the judgment of the Selectmen, it was necessary. Instead of leaving the matter to the district surveyor, they brought up a foreign surveyor, who decided that the road should be raised where it was highest and let alone where it was lowest. They put a certain amount of gravel there, no matter whether it was the right kind or not, and the amount expended was cut down to $350. The balance of the special appropriation, of $250 — and it was all needed—was turned into the common fund of the highway department. They had no more right to put it there than to put it in the poor department. Then there is the superintendent, who is paid $1000. This man (pointing to Mr. Walcott) drew a per diem of $2.50, for what days he worked. Our superintendent draws a per diem of $3.00 whether he works or not. Is it worth more to superintend the roads in the aristocratic portions of the town than in the plebeian? He thought $2 50 per day was enough salary in either part of the town.

Mr. Spaulding said he would like to see the property of the town in the live stock; would like to see the oxen, horses, etc., at the town farm. There was, however, one glorious team belonging to the town. It was the span of horses costing $900. Were they bought for service, or beauty, or what? Was it thought if they did not weigh 1700 lbs. each they would be a disgrace? Many years ago he had heard that one of a span belonging to the town cost $450. He was bought by a neighbor of the speaker for $75, and he got cheated.—More than half the money expended for these horses was thrown away. In regard to the Fire Department the increase in expenses for the last ten years was 250 per cent.—from $4,000 to $10,000. He believed in an efficient fire department and that such ought to be maintained. It cost as much now to light the room in the edifice erected for the department as it used to for lighting the whole of Main Street. He could not tell where to apply the knife, but he did not believe the town should expend $10,000 for a fire department.—He believed this, especially, as a citizen of West Peabody, to whom the fire department was of no use. In the miscellaneous department the expenses in 1873 were $315.32; in 1883, $1142.33, an increase of about 400 per cent. For street lights in 1873 it cost $807.37; in 1883, $2523.26. The town must be a most luminous place. It cost in 1873 to light the lamps, $118 — this last year it cost $1322.25. They could be properly lighted for half the amount.

In the police department in 1873 the cost was $3987.56; in 1883, $5962.70—an increase of over $1700. In our last town meeting an aged man, of sturdy common sense, having no personal interest at stake, but only desiring the welfare of the town, asked that $500 be cut off from the appropriation of the day police. If he had asked for a reduction of $1500, he would have been within bounds.

In the reports of the Poor Department the speaker found that the property was not worth as much by $2,000 as it was 25 years ago. This apportionment must be right, for has not Mr. Vittum told us the value of a yearling hen? there were so many at 25 cents apiece. By the report, also, he found that all the meat on hand at the poor farm was $8.00 in pork. That would be about enough for one meal for the inmates, provided the overseers of the poor were not present. He also found in the items of this department the word exchange used many times. He didn't understand the barter of the poor farm. They sell pork and buy pork.—He can't find out the gain resulting thereby. He could not find an itemized account of the products of the farm. There is an account of the expenditures but not of the products. He did not think any farmer would keep accounts for himself in that way. There were so many tons of coal bought; didn't know how many went to the poor farm, nor how many barrels of flour are sent there. He wanted to know how much the town were paying for these things, what kind of flour was best for paupers to live on. In reference to the distribution of supplies out of the Alms House, no one knows from the report where one dollar of it went to. The voters of the town want to know who are supplied, and whether provisions or money are given to unworthy persons. The 1900 voters of the town do not want to run to the office to find out these things. This is not the way the accounts of this dept. were kept when the town was first divided—it is not the way our neighboring town keeps their account. The speaker wanted to know if people were maintained by the town who are able to maintain themselves.—The expenses of the Alms House were then compared with that of 1873. The cost of medicine and medical attendance in 1873 was $72; in 1883, $742.13 — a gain of 1000 per cent.; and yet with all this allopathic medicine there had been but one death—whose body, he was happy to say, had been decently buried, and not sent to a medical college for dissection. In 1873 it cost for fuel, $423.50; in 1883, 1587.50—an increase of nearly 400 per cent. For meal and grain it cost in 1873, $566.92; in 1883, $1484.01—a gain of 300 per cent. For flour and bread is cost in 1873, $475.67; in 1883, $1963.28. For groceries, in 1873, $553.82; in 1883, $1023.35—a gain of 200 per cent.

Mr. Spaulding closed by an earnest appeal to the voters of the town, if it was not time to halt. We cannot go on indefinitely in this way.

Mr. Jas. P. King arose to reply to Mr. Spaulding, but it was then after 10 o'clock. He claimed he could show that every dollar that had been expended in the department with which he was connected could be accounted for. Mr. Needham also said he thought he had found a remedy for all this.—After some talk of adjourning till the next evening, it was decided to continue the discussion next Friday evening, with Mr. James P. King for the opening speaker of the evening. The meeting then adjourned.

An advertisement of the Raymond Colorado and California tour is published in another column. Two dates of departure are yet to be had, Thursday, April 12, and Thursday, 26, one party that leaves on an earlier date having already left with full numbers. The trip is well planned, and all the arrangements will be carried out in first-class style. A conductor and two assistants will be in charge of each party, and the excursionists will enjoy many privileges and advantages not attainable by ordinary travelers. These excursions are patronized by the best class of tourists, and good parties are already assured for both the 12th and the 26th. W. Raymond, 240 Washington street, Boston, will furnish a descriptive circular.

Original Poetry.

The Itinerancy.

BY MRS. DR. STEELE.

Read at the sociable in the Methodist vestry, April 2.

Three circling years have whirled away, and standing on the brink,
Of the unfathomed stream beyond, I sit me down to think.
I muse upon the passing years, the years so swiftly told,
Since on the great itinerant wheel, my car of life has rolled.
I mind me of the numerous homes, whose friendly roofs have spread
Their sheltering arms, from cold and heat,
to shield the wanderer's head;
Whose welcoming doors stood open wide to invite the wayworn feet,
Disclosing faces clothed with smiles, the stranger ones to greet,—
The cheerful hearth with warmth aglow—
the thoughtful word and deed—
The willing hands, so kindly lent, supplying every need.
In every home, faces that first, in kindly welcome smiled,
Voices that bade the rover rest, and home-sickness beguiled,
Those faces I remember still—those voices,
still, I hear,
Some sundered far by time and space, and some before me here.
O, faces dear! on memory's page, your photographs are set,
Along my years, from youth to age, your voices linger yet.
When sorrow, sad-eyed guest, came in, then in its darkest hour,
Some sympathizing souls have striven to mitigate its power.
One fearful night, Death's angel came, and hovered round our door,
Then sleepless eyes there were, that watched,
with one till night was o'er.
Another night, that Angel came and would not be denied,
Then others, in our mourning group, stood weeping by our side.
Joy, too, has come into our homes, these voices, glad and free,
Attuned with ours their psalm of praise, and swelled the harmony.
The panorama moves along—the shifting scenes grow dim,
We look upon life's westering sun, we learn
our vesper hymn,
But as the tints of sunset skies, oftimes appear more fair,
Than all the glories of the morn, or than the midday glare,
So, as, towards life's descending sun, we come to turn our gaze,
We view the horizon clothed with light,
with glory all ablaze.
How rich is the itinerant's life, with memory's jewels set,
More precious than the glittering gems, on kingly coronet.
Sweet life, its loves are widely spread, its homes are everywhere,
Its fruits drop from a thousand trees, its gardens blossom fair.
O! blessed is the pastor's lot, thrice blessed his who stands,
Among a people who delight to uphold his weary hands;
And such are here—O faithful souls! be ours
the bliss untold,
To tread, with you, the shining streets, and strike our harps of gold,
To join the rapturous song that swells above
the crystal sea:
And see our Savior, face to face, through all eternity.

Requiescat in Pace.

BY H. S. G.

A churchyard lay on the hillside sear,
And the graves looked cold and sad and drear.

And the sleepers rest 'neath the frozen turf,
In the silent tombs of the icy earth.

And the birds scarce alight on the leafless trees
As they sigh and moan in the chilling breeze.

And the careless feet of the traveller tread,
O'er the grass-grown graves of the unknown dead.

And ghastly and white through the lonely night,
The watchful moon sheds her pale, cold light.

Even the stars of Heaven, look sadly down
On the burial ground of Harvard town.

II

For when we die we're forgotten,
Except by a faithful few,
And the world forgets our being
As it turns toward something new.

But the spirit seeks its Maker,
And it casts its cloak aside,
As it crosses the swift flowing river,
Borne on by wind and tide.

Till at last it reaches Heaven,
Its eternal home on high,
And then it keeps and guards us,
When memory dims the eye.

What if we are forgotten,
And our graves are trampled o'er?
Think of the welcome awaiting us
When we reach the other shore.

Loved ones will stand with out stretched hands;
Loved ones near and dear,
And the grave will yawn with only our form,
So sad and lonely and drear.

And when we before God's altar
Stand with humble heads bowed low,
We will hear mid bursts of glory,
"You are pure and white as snow."

Poet's Corner.

Waiting for Spring.

[The following verses were written a few days previous to her death by Miss Ethel Reynolds Clarke, who died in Lawrence, Mass., April 3, aged 19 years. She was the daughter of Mr. Frederic E. Clarke, agent of the Pemberton Mills in that city, and had been ill with consumption several months. The circumstances add a pathetic interest to the poem, which possesses a simple beauty of its own.]

'Tis weary, weary waiting for the spring-
time,
Cold winter holds us fast in icy chains;
When shall we feel the pleasant perfumed breezes
Of April, with its sun and gentle rains?

I long to see the new young grass up-springing,
And trees that wave their leafy branches round,
I long to scent the fragrant apple blossoms,
And see them fall in showers to the ground.

'Tis weary, weary waiting for the spring-
time,
But why, my heart, art thou cast down
and sad?
Sure there is something blessed in all seasons
Will fill the heart with joy and make it glad.

'Tis cheerfulness, and while we have that with us,
We'll keep and ne'er let it from us depart;
For when we have this beautiful, bright virtue,
We have perpetual springtime in the heart.

Selected Story.

Sketching For Life.

Up to the age of seventeen, no girl's life could have been more happy than mine. My mother had died in my early childhood, when I was too young to feel her loss; and my dear father and I had for each other so strong an affection, that I never learned to know it. I can not tell you how he tried to fill her place to me—how thoughtful he was, almost womanly in his tenderness and care, so that I might never feel how great a loss mine had been.

But all too soon the end came; it was the old, sad story of speculation—hopes so alluring, schemes so plausible, ending in results so disastrous; and still almost a child, I found myself an orphan, and except for the pittance of forty pounds a year saved from the wreck of my father's property, dependent upon my own exertions for a livelihood. The talent for painting which I inherited had been most carefully cultivated; but my uncle, who took upon himself the care of my future, thought very lightly of it, and I agreed readily enough to his suggestion, that for the present I should take a situation as companion, caring little then how my life should be arranged. Such a situation he had just heard of, and all preliminaries being quickly arranged, it was settled that I should start for my new home—in Scotland—on a certain Friday, leaving Euston by the midnight-express.

At the last moment, it was discovered that my drawing-materials had not been packed, and I had to take them in the railway-carriage with me. Trifling as such an accident seemed, how much I owe to it!

My fellow-travellers from Euston were three ladies who, I understood, were going as far as Edinburgh; but at Rugby they alighted and left me, not at all to my regret, alone. Not, however, for long, for when the train was almost in motion again, the door was hastily opened, and a man jumped in just in time.

Engrossed as I was with my own thoughts, I had a sort of uneasy feeling that he was looking at me; and after struggling against the desire to raise my eyes for some minutes, at last I looked up. I shall never forget the effect of that look! The man had in dress and general bearing, the appearance of a gentleman, and there was nothing noticeable about him except the eyes. They held mine with a dreadful kind of fascination, and I was utterly powerless to look away.

Presently he left his seat by the door, and came up to the one opposite mine at the other end of the carriage—not speaking, but still regarding me with the same intent and wild look—and, after a few minutes, put his hand into his pocket and brought out, to my intense horror, a small revolver! Still he did not remove his eyes from my face, though the expression of his own softened a little, and a sort of pitying, regretful look came over it.

Presently he spoke; and you can imagine my horror and despair when I knew that I was alone in the carriage—the train travelling at the rate of more than forty miles an hour—with a madman!

He spoke quite calmly and quietly, though his words made my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth, and I thought every moment my heart would stop its beating.

'My dear young lady,' he said, 'I regret that a very sad necessity is laid upon me. I shall have to take your life,' as coolly and calmly as he might have said, 'I shall have to open the window.'

I was too horror-stricken to speak, and he continued:

'I assure you that it shall be done as painlessly as possible—you know it is a very easy death—quite instantaneous! Just think! Hardly a moment of pain, and all trouble for you over forever!'

The prospect was hardly so consolatory to me as he appeared to think it would be; indeed, I was almost paralyzed with terror; but with some wild idea of gaining time, I managed to gasp out:

'But why—why must you kill me? What harm have I ever done you, or any one? I never saw you before!'

'You have done me no harm. I regret deeply the necessity laid upon me, but it is a necessity.'

'But how? Why,' I ejaculated.

'Because of my oath,' he said, sternly. 'I have sworn to kill every lady I meet with hair the color of yours, and I cannot break my vow. Besides, after all, it will be a kindness. Am I not saving you from her fate?' and his look became so wild and fierce as he spoke, toying excitedly with the revolver in his hand, that I thought my last moment had come.

'What has my hair to do with it, and whom do you speak of as her?'

'Of my sister, of course—my darling, lovely Lucy! You are like her, your eyes like hers; and your hair, that glorious hair, exactly the color of hers.'

How little had I ever thought my chestnut hair would bring me into such fearful danger as this! For ludicrous though it sounds—to lose one's life because the color of one's hair happened to be that of another person's—I could not doubt that the madman beside me was determined to murder me!

I knew that the next station we stopped at would be Stafford, and we were many, many miles from there; my only hope lay in gaining time, although that was scarcely a hope. I felt that I must die! However, I managed to conceal my terror and to speak.

'Cannot you tell me about your sister? What was her fate?' Then, as I saw the ferocity of his glance; I felt that I had made a mistake, and hastened to say something else—anything. 'What was she like? Was she very beautiful?'

'Beautiful! She was lovely—lovely as an angel, with large, blue eyes, and hair of that glorious chestnut—just like your own,' he added, again fixing his eyes upon my face.

This was becoming unpleasantly personal, and I hastened to break the silence:

'Have you any photograph of her?'

'Photograph? No; no likeness of her at all. I would give anything for one, though I do not believe that any artist could ever produce such beauty as hers.'

While he was speaking, a thought struck me—it surely must have been an inspiration; to it I owe my life, I am quite certain. I addressed my terrible companion again:

'I think if you describe your sister to me I could draw her likeness to you. I have often sketched heads before, and I have my materials here.'

How thankful I felt that I had forgotten to pack them up! He turned toward me with a quick look of suspicion, which slowly changed into doubt. My voice trembled so, that the words were scarcely audible; and as I fumbled at the strings of my case trying to undo them, I doubted whether my shaking fingers would guide the pencils. The madman evidently suspected my design, and looked doubtfully two or three times from me to the deadly weapon and back again. At last he said:

'Well, it's very kind of you to try, though I don't believe you will be able to do it; but there will be plenty of time before we get near the station,' with a peculiar glance at the revolver, which curdled the blood in my veins.

I succeeded at last in getting out a sketching-book and some pencils, and then, with one brief, earnest prayer for aid, commenced my work. The man told me his sister's face was an oval shape, and he described it and her features as clearly and distinctly as any one in perfect possession of their senses could have done.

At first I tried to lengthen my task, for I knew Stafford was two hours' journey from Rugby, and I dared not look at my watch to see how much of that time had already elapsed, for I knew, that would not do. The maniac, seeing no likeness to his sister as yet in my drawing, evidently began to doubt my powers; so I contrived to proceed more quickly, and presently, two or three lucky strokes altering the whole expression of the face, he declared that the likeness was really coming. No need, then, to complain of his attention wandering; he eagerly watched every stroke, offering each moment a suggestion for an alteration here, a curve there, and so on, quite intelligently.

Seeing how engrossed he was, I began to think how I could turn this to some advantage in order to escape. At first, the wild thought crossed my brain to open the carraige-door next me and jump out; but a moment's reflection showed me that, considering the rate at which we were then travelling, such a course would mean certain death. The last time we had stopped, the other side of the train to that where I was sitting had been next the platform; but I knew it was not always the same, and the only plan I could think of at all rested chiefly on the hope that at Stafford it would be on my side.

I knew that the door was not locked, because when I first took my seat the fastening was not quite secure, and we had called the attention of the guard to it, who, I was sure had not locked it. I determined then to unfasten this door, if I could contrive to do so unperceived, the moment the train slackened speed, and jump out as soon as I could do so with any safety. If the platform were that side, so much the better; if not—well I would rather risk injury than be shot in cold blood.

You may think how my heart beat, and how my fingers trembled, although I contrived to talk carelessly about the drawing, asking my companion's opinion of almost every stroke. Most wonderful it was, that in such terrible fear and anxiety, I should be able to draw at all, much more that I should be able to produce a likeness to a person I had never seen—a thing I should have declared impossible at any other time.

At last the critical moment arrived. I felt the train perceptibly slackening, and guessed that the station was at hand.

'There,' I said brightly, 'I think you had better hold this up to the lamp and examine it critically; perhaps you will find some further alterations necessary.'

He took the sketch from me, suspecting nothing, and held it up to the amp, standing with his back to me, and actually leaving his revolver—which all this time he had been holding—on the seat.

By this time the station-lights were in sight, and without pausing to think of the danger, I seized the revolver, opened the door, and jumped on to the platform, but more than fifty yards from the buildings forming the station.

I was not an instant too soon. With a wild shout the maniac followed me—I could even feel his breath upon my cheek! I tried to scream for help, but could not; however fear though it robbed me of my voice must have lent me wings, for I distanced my pursuer, and fell panting and breathless almost into the arms of the station-master.

By a fortunate chance, or rather, I should say, a providential occurence, group of people were standing near, and seeing my alarm—for I was still powerless to speak—and the wild appearance of my pursuer, seized and overpowered him.

When I was sufficiently recovered I told my story; I think they would hardly have believed it but for the revolver—which I was unconsciously still clutching—and the drawing which was found in the carriage.

The maniac was secured for the night, and I, too upset to continue my journey at once, sent a telegram to Mr. Macdonald, and gratefully accepted the shelter offered me by the station-master's wife.

I afterwards heard that the maniac, from whose terrible designs I had been so mercifully preserved, had escaped from an asylum in London, and had been in the train from Euston, but in a different carriage. He had been hopelessly insane for many years, but had latterly been so much less violent that his keepers had relaxed their watchfulness over him and so he had escaped.

It was known that the poor fellow (who was by birth and education a gentleman) had lost his reason through some tragedy in connection with a sister who had been very beautiful, and, singularly enough, had hair the color of mine, but I was never able to learn the particulars.

The story of my adventure, of course, became publicly known, and through it I was introduced to Mr. G. S.——, then one of the first English living artists. With the generosity of a true genius and a great man, he procured for me advantages of instruction, etc., such as I could never otherwise have obtained, and opened up to me the way to the career of an artist. So, you see, I owe a great deal indirectly to my terrible adventure in the Scotch midnight-express.

GIVEN AWAY.

We cannot help noticing the liberal offer made to all invalids and sufferers by Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. You are requested to call at Spaulding's Drug Store, and get a Trial Bottle free of cost, if you are suffering with Consumption, Severe Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Hay Fever, Loss of Voice, Hoarseness, or any affection of the Throat or Lungs. It will positively cure you.

COMFORT FOR THE BALD-HEADED FRATERNITY.—The London Lancet, eminent medical authority, comforts the bald-headed men when it says: Abundant hair is not a sign of bodily or mental strength, the story of Sampson having given rise to the notion that hairy men are strong physically, while the fact is that the Chinese, who are the most enduring of all races, are nearly bald; and as to the supposition that long and thick hair is a sign and token of intellectuality, all antiquity, all mad houses and all common observation are against it. The easily wheedled Esau was hairy. The mighty Cæsar was bald. Long-haired men are generally weak and fanatical, and men with scant hair are the philosophers and soldiers and statesmen of the world.

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

While attending a spiritual seance in Philadelphia, a few days ago, a lady received a communication from the alleged spirit of her husband, directing her to dig up a certain portion of her cellar, where she would find a lot of gold. She followed the instructions, but, instead of finding money, opened the mouth of the old well and fell into it, and was nearly suffocated.

A Miss Buchanan, once rallying a brave soldier on his courage said: "Now, Captain Johnson, do you really mean to tell me you can walk up to the cannon's mouth without fear?" "Yes," was the prompt reply, "or a Buchanan's either," and he did it. It may be safely assumed that the lady, to whom the gallant Captain thus paid his respects, hadn't the catarrh. This malady is as loathsome as it is painful. It's cure has heretofore been considered impossible. Ely's Cream Balm, however, never fails to cure it. Mr. Nathan Fegley, with E. F. Montz, Merchant, Wilkesbarre, Pa., says: "I've had catarrh for 15 years. Ely's Cream Balm has opened my nostrils and reduced the inflammation. My eyes, too, can stand strong light." This balm is a marvel of fragrance, and curative powers—is not a liquid or snuff, and is easily applied.

TO OWNERS OR KEEPERS OF DOGS.

Extracts from Chapter 102 of Public Statutes:

SECT. 80. Every owner or keeper of a dog of three months old or over shall annually, on or before the thirtieth day of April, cause it to be registered, numbered, described, and licensed for one year from the first day of the ensuing May, in the office of the clerk of the city or town wherein said dog is kept, and shall cause it to wear around its neck a collar distinctly marked with its owner's name and its registered number.

SECT. 81. An owner of a dog may at any time have it licensed until the first day of the ensuing May; and a person becoming the owner or keeper of a dog after the first day of May, not duly licensed, shall cause it to be numbered, described and licensed as provided in the preceding section.

SECT. 82. The fee for every license shall be two dollars for a male dog, and five dollars for a female dog.

SECT. 87. Whoever keeps a dog contrary to the provisions of this chapter shall forfeit fifteen dollars, five dollars of which shall be paid to the complainant, and ten dollars to the treasurer of the county in which the dog is kept.

SECT. 90. The mayor of each city and the chairman of the selectmen of each town shall annually, within ten days from the first day of July, issue a warrant to one or more police officers or constables, directing them to proceed forthwith to kill or cause to be killed all dogs within such city or town not licensed and collared according to the provisions of this chapter, and to enter complaint against the owners or keepers thereof; and any person may, and every police officer and constable shall, kill or cause to be killed all such dogs whenever or wherever found.

Book Notices.

FRANK LESLIE'S SUNDAY MAGAZINE for May is an unusually interesting one; prominent among the many admirable articles are a continuation of "What is Presbyterianism," the present paper being by Rev. E. F. Hatfield, D. D.; also a continuation of De Leon's "The American Pilgrim in Palestine;" and a characteristic article by the editor, "Home." There are contributions of articles, serial and short stories, sketches, essays, poems, etc., by Alfreton Hervey, Adelaide Stout, O. M. Birrell, Edwin Arnold, Robert Buchanan, Ida E. Hervey, Rev. Mr. Hammond, J. W. Thirwall, and other favorite authors. In the Home Pulpit, is a sermon by Dr. Talmage, "The Eye." This Magazine's popularity is constantly increasing. The subscription is $3 a year; single copy, 25 cents, postpaid. Address Mrs. Frank Leslie, Publisher, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.

Our Little Ones and the Nursery for April is delightful as ever with its seventeen illustrated articles, which enlisted the services of nearly as many artists. Published by the Russell Publishing Company, Boston.

We have received the April number of Brown & Holland's Shorthand News, a nicely printed magazine published in Chicago, Ill. Among its many attractions this month are several letters of interest to all shorthand writers, eight pages of engraved shorthand, etc. Everybody is invited to send $2.00 for a year's subscription.

OBJECTS OF ODD-FELLOWSHIP.—Friendship is truly a noble sentiment, and one that deserves the exalted rank which Odd Fellowship assigns to it. Heathen nations, even have not been strangers to its cultivation. That the Greeks held in high honor the formation of ties of particular friendship among their braves and warriors, is attested by their mythology as well as their history. The noblest of their poets, whose immortal verse is still the chief wonder of all literature, though incomplete the character of Achilles himself, until adorned with a devoted attachment to a contemporary chieftain. Among many of their States, Sparta in particular, a tie of this sort was esteemed so inseparable a part of every generous character, that the youth were encouraged, by the law and by public precept, to form betimes some honorable individual attachment, and to signalize through life, not only at home but in the dangers of the field, their mutual fidelity to the chosen brother of their career, as citizens or as soldiers. A like practice, tho' to a less extent, prevailed with the Romans; and among that people the friendship of some of their most learned and distinguished citizens was publicly honored and celebrated. In the time of prosperity, it is easy to assume a friendly demeanor; mere professions of love and esteem may co-exist with the most hollow and superficial sentiment. But in the season of adversity, the professed friend is called upon to show the depth of his attachment—to abandon ease—to part with a portion of his goods, or even to risk his life. Genuine friendship will endure this test; and, when all adventitious circumstances are removed, it will abide the gathering storm, and shine brightest in the darkest hour.—From the Old Ritual.

THE MEAN MAN.—Sometimes I wonder what a mean man thinks about when he goes to bed, says Burdette in the Hawkeye. When he turns out the light and lies down. When the darkness closes in about him and he is alone, and compelled to be honest with himself. And not a bright thought, nor a generous impulse, nor a manly act, nor a word of blessing, nor a grateful look, comes to bless him again. Not a penny dropped into the outstretched palm of poverty, nor the balm of a loving word dropped into the aching heart; no sunbeam of encouragement cast upon a struggling life; the strong right hand of fellowship reached out to help some fallen man to his feet—when none of these things come to him as the "God bless you" of the departed day, how he must hate himself! How he must try to roll away from himself and sleep on the other side of the bed. When the only victory he can think of is some mean victory in which he has wronged a neighbor. No wonder he sneers when he tries to smile. How pure and fair and good the rest of the world must look to him, and how cheerless and dusty and dreary must his own path appear. Why, even one lone, isolated act of meanness is enough to scatter crumbs in the bed of the average, ordinary man, and what must be the feelings of a man whose whole life is given up to mean acts? When there is so much suffering and heartache and misery in the world, anyhow, why should you add one pound of wickedness or sadness to the general burden? Don't be mean, my boy. Suffer injustice a thousand times rather than commit it once.

The first daily newspaper printed in the world was established and edited by a woman—Elizabeth Mallet, in London, 1702—almost 200 years ago. In her salutatory, she said she had established a newspaper "to spare the public half the impertinences which the ordinary papers contain." The first newspaper published in America, of which we have any record, was in Massachusetts. It was called the Massachusetts Gazette and News-Letter. After the death of the editor, the widow edited it in the most spirited manner for two or three years. It was the only paper that did not suspend publication when Boston was besieged by the British. The widow's name was Margaret Craper. In 1732 Rhode Island issued its first newspaper. It was owned and edited by Anna Franklin. She and her two daughters did the printing, and their servants worked the printing-press. History tells us that for her quickness and correctness she was appointed Printer to the Colony, supplying pamphlets, etc., to the colonial officers. She also printed an edition of the Colonial Laws of 340 pages. In 1776, Sarah Goddard printed a paper in Newport, R. I., ably conducting it, afterward associating with her John Carter. The firm was announced as Sarah Goddard & Co., she taking the partnership precedence, as was proper and right. In 1772 Clementine Reid published a paper in Virginia favoring the colonial cause, and greatly offending the royalists; and, two years after, another paper was started in the interests of the Crown by Mrs. H. Boyle, borrowing the name of Mrs. Reid's paper, which was the Virginia Gazette, but which was short-lived. Both of the papers were published in the town of Williamsburg. The colonial paper was the first newspaper in which the Declaration of Independence was printed. In 1773 Elizabeth Timothy published and edited a paper in Charleston, S. C. After the Revolution, Anne Timothy became its editor, and was appointed State Printer, which position she held seventeen years. Mary Crouch published a paper in Charleston about the same time, in special opposition to the stamp act. She afterward removed her paper to Salem, Mass., and continued its publication there for years after.—Portland (Oregon) New North-West.

POSTMASTER GENERAL Timothy Howe died very suddenly recently; at Kenosha, Wis. Mr. Howe was a New England man by birth, his native place being Livermore, Maine. After having received his education in his own state, and been elected to the Legislature, in 1845, he removed to Green Bay, Wisconsin, where he was elected circuit judge and afterward U. S. Senator from his adopted state. He served three terms in that body until 1879. After his retirement he was tendered by President Garfield an appointment as a member of the board of commissioners sent by the United States to represent this government in the international monetary congress at Paris, his associates being ex-Senator Thurman of Ohio and William M. Evarts of New York. He remained abroad about six months and in December 1881 he was tendered the position of postmaster general, under President Arthur. In politics he had always been considered a stalwart republican. He was a strong advocate of the reduction of the rate of postage, and has been instrumental in securing many reforms and better mail facilities in different parts of the country. The country will lose a valuable and faithful public officer in his demise. The post offices throughout the country are closed this afternoon out of respect to his memory.

One of the queer things in business is the propensity of people to seek irregular mediums of advertising. It is unaccountable the prices some men pay for sticking their advertisement in irregular places. Especially is this so when compared with their unwillingness to pay anything for advertising in the regular channels. Advertisements thrust into irregular and unbusiness-like places impress the general mind that the concern is of a similar character. But an advertisement in a weekly newspaper carries the impression that the advertiser has a standing in his own community which he is not afraid to show to his neighbors, and that he does not shrink from competition with the best of them.

The advertisement of the New York Sun which commences this week in our columns will be continued for three months. The Sun states that the circulation of its several editions last year was 55,536,030, against 50,236,919 the year previous. The Sun, while it furnishes a live and generally acceptable newspaper at a very low rate, expends a great deal of money to advertise the fact. This is one of the secrets of its success. The Sun believes that every man should subscribe for and liberally support his local newspaper first and foremost. Having done this conscientiously and faithfully, it advises all those who may wish to supplement their town or county paper with a metropolitan journal, to give The Sun a trial.

JOHN P. FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers

DR. DEEMS, of New York, contributes an article on "Street Begging" in the current number of the North American Review, which should be perused by all our readers. Probably no man in the country is better qualified to write on such a subject, or whose suggestions are entitled to more weight, than the author in question. Pastor of a church in New York of a constantly shifting population, the temporary religious home of strangers and of the poor of the city, he is in a condition to know to what extent begging in the streets has become a business, and how far the charities of the people who are disposed to aid the deserving, should be bestowed upon them.

In his judgment the deserving poor will not beg. It is only the paupers who are found in this capacity, and between the two there is a wide distinction. "A man may be rich because he is honorable: or he may be poor because he is honorable," but paupers will not work, "and are ordinarily poor people whose poverty is due to themselves and might be avoided if they were what they ought to be, and what, therefore they might be."

That a majority, a large majority of those who are found on our streets asking alms, are of this class, can be proved by any individual offering them simple employment. It is shown in country towns where tramps who are put up at the station houses over night are compelled to work the next day on the town roads. They give such towns in future a wide berth. In answer to the suggestions of those conscientious people who think that it is better to help nine unworthy people than to suffer one unworthy person to go unhelped, Dr. Deems asks, "Is it help? The gist of the whole question lies here. If a man prefers begging to work, and you keep him from work and at begging are you helping that man?"

We cannot forbear quoting a single instance vouched for by the author as authentic, as an illustration of how the principle of furnishing work to these beggars operates:

"A gentleman of high character and great generosity, who has a large manufacturing establishment in the city of New York, conducted his business where it was very easy of access to beggars. They so interfered with his work and wrought upon his feelings, that he had recourse to the test of giving the applicants apparent employment. On the floor on which were his counting-room he had a pump erected, in full view of his desk. He did not need the pump. The water which was drawn ran off unused; but still it was some work to draw the water. As each beggar came, and was told he should work for his living, his pathetic reply was to the effect of, 'Oh! if I could only find work.' The pump was immediately proffered, and pay at a rate which would procure a night's lodging for an hour's work. He was told he could have that work every day until he found other employment. The suffering applicant was much obliged, but in one case he had a lame hand, and in another he had a friend at the door whom he must dismiss, so that he should not be kept waiting during the hour; but it seemed to take all the rest of the day to dismiss the 'friend,' as the applicant never came back. In other cases there were other excuses; and the upshot of the experiment was that, while a few accepted an hour's work at good pay, there was only one man who returned the second morning, and he never came back again."

WE HAVE devoted considerable space this week to the doings of the West Peabody Farmers' Club, and to the remarks of Rev. Willard Spaulding in his criticism of the reports of the town. These meetings every week attract considerable attention and are largely attended by the residents of that locality. If the distance were not so great, many of our people in the center of the town would doubtless attend. But as the subject matter of the town report is of interest to all the people, we have given an extended report of what was said. Inasmuch as the subject will be further discussed Friday evening, and, as much that could be said in refutation of Mr. Spaulding's statements will doubtless be said by Mr. King, who can answer for the Poor Department, and others, we refrain from any extended comment at this time.

The strictures of Mr. Spaulding, however, against our town clerk, and the salary paid him by the town, deserve a word of mention, showing, as they do, how little Mr. Spaulding understands the duties which are performed by Mr. Poor. As far as the writing itself is concerned, there are doubtless men who might consider themselves competent to fill his place—and would be willing to, at even less salary than Mr. Poor receives. But it would be poor economy in the town to replace Mr. Poor by any of these pretentious parties, even if they had to double the salary of our town clerk to retain him. The mere clerical labor performed by Mr. Poor is but a portion of the work required of him, even in his position as town clerk. There are people coming in to his office from time to time, looking up old matters, inquiring after subjects connected with the history of the town, with which Mr. Poor is perfectly familiar. The information can be obtained in a very short period, as any of our readers who have had occasion to consult Mr. Poor are aware. Everything in the office of the town is arranged in a systematic manner, and it is a matter of pride that the town is able, through our town clerk, to give such information as is desired by citizens or outsiders, many times at inconvenience to Mr. Poor in his regular duties, but always with cheerfulness and urbanity. The work of Mr. Poor in this respect is entirely gratuitous. For it he receives no pay, and it is oftentimes the service which is of the greatest value to the citizens of the town. For this, and this alone, our town clerk is worth all that he receives for his clerical duties, even if not one of them were performed by him. In our judgment the town will increase rather than diminish the salary of Mr. Poor in years to come. If any extravagance is manifest in the expenditures of the town it is certainly not in this direction.

ALL THE criticisms which have been made by the clergy of Massachusetts, on the Fast Day proclamation of Gov. Butler, have been called out by the paragraph instructing them as to their duties in the pulpit that day—duties which they are fully as competent to understand as His Excellency. When, therefore, the governor announces that the proclamation was not his, but that of Gov. Gore, in 1810, we do not see that he makes any point on the clergy, especially as he admits that the objectionable clause was added by himself.

No one of the clergy, or the press, as far as we can learn, have criticized in any way the admirable tone of piety which runs through the entire proclamation, except to remark upon its inconsistency as compared with the well known views of Gov. Butler. Whether he intended such a proclamation, coming from his hands, to be considered as a travesty on religion, or whether he wished the people to understand that he had made a new profession of faith, was not clear. But he has made it clear by the acknowledgment of his plagiarism, and he has shown, only, as far as we are able to see, that, in spite of his boasted devotion to the State, he was too indolent to write his own proclamation.

The success of the new venture of FRANK COUSINS is being demonstrated daily in the throng of purchasers who are seen in the various departments of the store. This week Mr. Cousins has a special announcement in our columns, which we commend to the perusal of our readers. The enterprising proprietor purposes to spend a portion of each day in the markets of Boston and elsewhere, on the lookout for special bargains for the "Bee Hive."

Mr. E. F. Johnson, of Moulton & Johnson, has been presented with an elegant gold mounted meerschaum pipe by Mr. John D. Mishler, of the Equine Paradox entertainment in recognition of the straightforward, satisfactory manner in which Mr. Johnson conducted their business in Salem. The pipe contains an engraved representation of Rip Van Winkle and his dog, and is a fine piece of work. Mr. Mishler is so well pleased with Mr. Johnson's management in Salem that he has engaged the latter to assume the local direction of their business in New Bedford, for the week commencing April 30. Mr. Johnson is a gentlemanly manager and has merited this gratifying recognition of merit.—Observer.

MORRILL & BOWEN, the young and enterprising carpet dealers, No. 245 Essex street, Salem, have a new advertisement in this issue. Mr. Bowen, recently associated with Mr. Morrill, has been long connected with Goldthwait & Bixby. They understand their business—are earnest and progressive, and we can assure our readers that it is a good place to buy carpets. They also keep a good line of upholstery goods and window shades, and any estimates in this line will be cheerfully furnished.

WILMOT, the clothier, still persists in giving away to his patrons watches, chains, and other useful commodities, besides giving a man the full value of his money in the way of ready made clothing. How he can do it is more than we can see. But he does it—that is certain, as many of our readers who have visited his store can testify.

H. P. Ives, at the old Corner Bookstore, in Salem, has a large assortment of wall paper, interior decorations, &c., in readiness for the Spring trade. Read his new advertisement in to-day's PRESS.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The grand Union ball of the "Three ones and a two" of the Brick Engine House, took place at Upton's Hall, last Wednesday evening and was in all respects one of the nicest and most successful affairs of the kind which has occurred in Peabody for many years. As early as eight o'clock the company began to gather and continued to arrive by twos and threes until after nine o'clock. At about half past eight the Salem Cadet Orchestra, Eben Upton, prompter, who occupied the stage, struck up the grand march, which was lead by Wm. J. Roome, Foreman of Steamer 1, and lady. Mr. Roome also acted as Floor Director, with the following gentlemen as aids: T. O. Bartlett, J. E. Millea, W. P. Hill, of H. & L. 1; F. B. Thomas, A. D. Gray, A. B. Osborn, of Hose 1; C. K. Bailey, W. F. Littlefield, W. A. Pray, of Steamer 1; J. A. Perkins, J. F. Moreland, C. M. Galeucia, of Steamer 2. After the march the dancing continued until supper time, about twelve o'clock. We need not say that the supper was an excellent one, after naming the caterer, Harvey Blunt of Boston, whose reputation was well sustained on this occasion. There was a large number of spectators and over one hundred and seventy-five couples participated in the dance. The hall was neatly trimmed and festooned with flags. The costumes of the ladies were neat and pretty while the firemen appeared in uniform, but little attempt being made at elaborate dressing. After supper dancing was resumed and continued until half past five when the company broke up. The following were among the companies from out of town that were represented: Old Yale of Wakefield; Excelsior Hose No. 2, of Beverly; Amazon No. 5 of Essex, Essex No. 2 of Essex; Steamer Rough and Ready No. 2 of Hyde Park; Washington Hose No. 4 of Beverly; Steamer No. 2 of Lynn; Eagle No. 4 of Reading; Steamer No. 1 of Salem; Franklin Hook & Ladder No. 1 of Salem. The last dance was danced by daylight.

Last Friday evening the following prizes of the Firemen's Relief Fair were drawn at Grand Army Hall:—Lady's Rattan Rocker, T. M. Davenport; Toilet Set, C. H. Weymouth; Silver Water Pitcher, C. Welch; Work Bag, M. C. Berry, Salem; Full Rigged Bark, J. Q. Bennett, Gloucester; Rug, N. R. Buxton; Satin Toilet Set, O. B. Chadwick; Red Toilet Set, B. N. Marks; Doll and Carriage, Grace L. Lee; Wine Set and Loaf of Wedding Cake, Annie Clothey; Pin Cushion, Frank Wilson; Nickle Plated Clock, Mrs. Betsey Roberts, So. Peabody; Music Roll, C. J. Eustis; Child's Set, F. S. Nevers; Album, Miss E. Tucker; Half Doz. Silver Knives, J. S. Barrett; One Pair of Vases, Minnie F. Moore, So. Peabody; Half Doz. Tea Spoons, Mrs. J. L. Putnam; Barometer, Mrs. E. S. Howard; Toilet Set, S. S. Littlefield; Butter Knife and Silver Spoon, W. A. Farnum; Half Doz. Silver Forks, W. Ward; Lady's Gold Neck Chain, J. Sheen, West Peabody; Six Silver Table Spoons, Mrs. F. Lloyd; Carriage Blanket, Fred F. Reed; Lambrequin, Mary Murray, So. Peabody; Broom Case, J. V. Robinson, So. Peabody; Tidy, F. Ellis; Log Cabin Quilt, W. Brown, Lynn; Doll's Crib, Katie Bresnahan; China Tea Set, Mrs. Fannie Chadwick; Panel, L. W. Brophy; Lady's Gold Watch, Wm. Trask; Pair of Horns, C. H. Phippen, Salem; Statuary, C. H. Phippen, Salem; Order for India Ink Portrait, Wm. Crowley.

We trust the friends of Mr. Horace G. Wheeler in this town will assist in a substantial manner at the benefit which is to be given him next Tuesday evening by the members of the Unity Club in the chapel of the Unitarian Church. Mr. Wheeler is devoting his spare time, outside of his daily labors with J. A. Lord Jr., to study for the stage. He has helped the society here in many ways not only this season, but in previous ones. He is also a member of the Barton Square Club, of Salem, whose members, we understand, will all signify their appreciation of his services there, by being present. There will be a full house, and as the chapel has a limited amount of room, it has been decided to limit the sale of the tickets, which have been placed at 50 cents each. They are for sale at Starr C. Hewitt's and at Daniel Low's, Salem.

Letters advertised, Apr. 11th, David Burke, John Bowen, O. K. Barton, Michael Connor, Timothy Donovan, Patrick Dailey, Mrs. E. Dodge, Bailey Goodridge, James Lynn, Elias McGowen, J. W. McDonald, Geo. W. Osborne, Geo. W. Pearson, J. W. Pope, Geo. W. Robertson, Ripley Bros., Mrs. J. Sullivan, E. A. Talbot, Nicholas Wilson. GEO. RANDALL, P. M.

"G. S." Cigars—all the rage—notning lik them—at George Stevens'.

So. PEABODY.—Rev. J. W. Colwell has been confined to the house the past week with a very severe cold. The Superintendent of the Sunday school conducted the services in the afternoon and evening last Sabbath.

G. F. Williams is going to erect a stable in the rear of his residence, on County Street.

Mr. Wm. Marshall has commenced the widening of Lynn Street above the ice houses.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Wiggin were presented with a daughter last Fast morning.

At the glass ball shooting, Fast day, some very good scores were made by Brown, Shaw, Keazer, Walton, Oliver and others. A very enjoyable time was had by all present.

Geo. Pierce and Chas. Batchelder have built them a boat house at the head of Spring pond.

The widening of Washington street has been begun by Putnam and Linehan.

Work was commenced on the Lynn & Boston Railroad last Tuesday at Wyoma. It would have commenced at the square to-day if the weather had been suitable.

The Universalist Church has been closed for about six weeks and extensive interior improvements have been made. The painting and frescoing is completed, but the carpet and pews are yet to be put in. When the auditorium is ready for occupancy it will be the finest in town. There is a great temptation in the interior ornamentation of churches to overdo it. This is not the case here. The work was done by Butler of Boston, who drew the plans and followed his own taste entirely; the society leaving it to his judgment. The finest work is seen in the frieze, which is of an olive tint, bordered by leaf and flower figures in bronze. There is a black walnut dado with a Grecian border, which forms part of the finish and produces a pleasing effect. An alteration has been made in the gallery, which has been lowered and the space which it occupied reduced about five feet. This gives more room at the entrance, and a double swing door on each side is to be hung. The vestry and ante rooms, which had been left white, have also been painted a darker tint, and everything looks clean and fresh. Mr. Walcott of Lynn had the supervision of the work, who has had a large experience in landscape painting and theatre decorations. There have also been employed some Swedes and Norwegians in the painting, who have shown great skill and ability in their work. A new carpet is to be laid this week, and the pews will be put in and receive a thorough cleaning and a coat of varnish. It is anticipated that the church will be ready for services by a week from next Sabbath.

The fifty-fourth annual meeting of the Essex County Teachers' Association was held at Merrimac Hall, North Andover, on Friday last. The regular secretary not being present, Mr. J. K. Cole of Peabody was elected pro tem. Mr. D. B. Hagar, principal of the Salem Normal school, read a paper, subject, "To what extent and in what manner shall technical grammar be taught." The choice of officers for the ensuing year resulted in the election of B. B. Russell, President; F. W. Anthony of Bradford, Vice President: Mr. J. K. Cole of Peabody, Secretary; Mr. Moulton of Newburyport, Treasurer, and for Councillors, Mr. Wiggin of Merrimac, J. L. Brewster of Lawrence and Alice Tenny of Haverhill.

The readings by Prof. Churchill, at the Peabody Institute, Thursday evening, will not only be a fine entertainment, but it will give many of our people an opportunity of helping the So. Peabody Church, in their efforts to complete their new house of worship. Prof. Churchill is well known here; as an elocutionist and reader he is unequalled; and we trust there will be a full house. The previous entertainments in aid of the fund, have been held in So. Peabody, and only a limited number of our citizens could patronize them. Now the friends of that church here, should show their generosity by patronizing Prof. Churchill's entertainment in a liberal manner.

Several small boys, including a son of Chas. D. Howard, were shooting at a target in the rear of Lowell Street, on Fast day, when through carelessness, a ball passed through the kitchen window of the residence of Mr. Daniel Woodbury. A little child was sitting by the window at the time and the bullet came in close proximity to her head. It was a narrow escape.

Our friend POWER, who now has a store in Salem, and Marblehead as well as in the town, does not intend to be distanced in prices, if we can judge by what he says in this issue. Hand sewed balmoral and congress shoes for men, for $3.25—seems to us even an editor can have a pair at that price- Power is also agent for the Dongola boots—for this town. None genuine except stamped on the lining.

BREAD!

BREAD!

BREAD!

BREAD!

Why will people annoy themselves by making bread, burn extra coal, be bothered in getting good yeast and flour; when by simply putting up one of all this inconvenience and expense can be saved. Please don't put the card up in the back side of the house, but put it where it can be seen plainly from the street, and you will be surprised to see how quick the drivers will notice it. The cause, some would say, is owing to their thinking some one in that house is in a starving condition, but such is not the fact, not by any means, the cause is this: The people in such houses are used to having first class bread, and as a natural consequence call for BRAGDON'S, so when you see one of his cards up you can put those people down as judges of every time. The probabilities are that if B. F. Butler should eat Bragdon's bread for the next three years, he would have the courage to try to enter the White House, but not having the opportunity of getting it, the chances for him are slim, and if he should send for it, it is a question whether he would get it, as the people of Peabody are of considerable account. A Perfect Combination with two Salient Advantages—Why it Concerns You.

BRAGDON'S CALL-CARDS

"There is no mistake about it," remarked Dr. M. F. Flowers, of Gallatin, Missouri, "BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS are one of the neatest combinations ever produced. They have two kinds of advantages over all others, which we may call the minor and the major.—First, they are clean and pleasant to use, never soiling the hands nor the linen of the wearer.—Second, they act quickly and powerfully. I have tried the Capcine Plaster on myself for pneumonia, and on my patients for various diseases, such as Neuralgia, Muscular Rheumatism, Lumbago, Kidney Trouble, etc., and in all cases relief has followed in from three to forty-eight hours.
Dr. Flower merely voices the written or oral opinion of thousands in his profession. BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS are the perfect external application. The genuine have the word CAPCINE cut in the centre. Price 25 c.

DOES AMERICA BLOCK PROGRESS?

America owes her greatness to far other causes than her prohibitory tariffs. Indeed, when one thinks of the vast resources which have come to America as sheer gifts from Nature—her boundless virgin soil, her untrodden forests, her inexhaustible mineral stores her climates favoring every fruit, her teeming seas—when one thinks of these, it is scarcely possible for him to hear with patience all these advantages ignored, and prosperity attributed to the mere barring out of the skilled handicraft of other nations. In the unfairest way—in a way which Englishmen need not hesitate to admit is often most keenly irritating—the large part of America's well-being, which is owing to the unique causes named, is jumbled up confusingly with other causes—all being set down as proof clear and positive against English views. Some silly people among ourselves even, though luckily they are too few to need much dwelling on, have had their intellect obfuscated in the same way. Surveying the whole scene, it may, in fact, be soberly and sadly said that the politico-economical doctrines of universal inter-relation and co-operation among mankind, which our chief thinkers have made it the task of England to spread, would at this hour be further advanced throughout the world if America were blotted out. This charge of hindering the world's progress will not be palatable to American ears, but is it not the plainest, most easily demonstrable truth? The American gospel of industrial isolation—what bearing has it, or can it have, possibly upon the world at large and general progress? Such a gospel is for America only. According to her own doctrine, taken strictly, the world beyond her own limits should be non-existent; and, in that case, doleful for her to think of, there would be no outside markets to which she could ship her superfluous products. We need not labor the point further. Taking the case at its lowest and narrowest, it is an actual fact that, as things stand, American prosperity has furnished a sophism which perplexes and darkens the whole free trade reasoning which England is irrevocably pledged to put forward as her own, and it is also a further fact that in her commercial arrangements with the nations of Europe, England inevitably finds her treaties with them made the harder and the worse from their being able to quote America against us. Only let it be imagined that our gigantic relative has had, as we are forced to call it, the courage to adopt free trade, how different the case would stand at this day? No shred of rhetoric even, not to speak of reason, would have remained for use by statesmen who are afraid of progress, or by incompetent manufacturers and traders who shake in their shoes at the thought of open competition. What we earlier spoke of as the modern ideal for a world in which mechanical science is to play her part, would by this time have decisively overcome the old, pre-scientific ideal, and rulers everywhere would have found themselves perforce committed, by the mere activity and example of the two great English-speaking peoples, to the freest intercommunication and widest exchange of products.—The Contemporary Review.

THEATRE ILLUMINATION.

Before the civil wars there were five companies and six play-houses. The Blackfriars, Cockpit and Salibury Theatres were small, and built exactly alike. Here they had pits for the gentry, and acted by candlelight. The Globe, Fortune and Bull were large houses, and partly open to the weather. There the performances took place by daylight. The circular lights over the stage existed till Garrick removed them, in December, 1765, and substituted candles and oil-lamps, thus originating the very definition of "the floats." It was not till 1817 that gas was first introduced into the theatres of Covent Garden, Drury Lane, the English Opera House, and Astley's Ampitheatre. Coal gas was originally used, but in 1821 the proprietors of Covent Garden adopted oil-gas, which they manufactured on the premises, and which led to the disastrous explosion in 1828, when wax-candles were again adopted for some years to illumine the front of the house. No reader of the "Rejected Addresses" of James and Horace Smith will need to be reminded of the picture of Drury Lane Theatre, drawn in 1813, when "from half-past five till six our long wax-candles, with short cotton wicks, touched by the lamp-lighter's Promethean art, start into light and make the lighter start." In 1822 the total number of gas-lights in theatres was estimated at 3,894, forming about a twentieth of the gasjets required in the city of Westminster alone. Sixty years ago, and for some time afterward, the supply to the theatres was exclusively derived from the gas-works in Great Peter street, Westminster. At several of our smaller theatres candles were in vogue down to a comparatively recent period and, it was not till April, 1843, when the Haymarket Theatre was opened for a summer season, that gas chandeliers illumined the interior for the first time.—Daily Telegraph.

The house of Washington Irving, two miles south of Tarrytown, New York, is greatly out of repair, but it is said that the library is exactly as he left it. Even his pen is on the table where he laid it down for the last time, and his papers as he had arranged them on his desk; they have never been disturbed.

A woman in Des Moines is seeking a second divorce from her husband. She was divorced from him last September, but was almost immediately remarried, and now asks the assistance of the law again to release her from matrimonial bonds, alleging that defendant has ever since treated her with unbearable cruelty.

TO PLEASE HER HUSDAND

Were the words of a Good Lady, Mrs. Hawkins, who has long suffered from the pain common to Chronic Rheumatism. A Woman's Patience and Fortitude Well Shown.

Your reporter found Mrs. Hawkins at 14 Exchange St., New Haven, Conn. "About four years ago," she said, "I was then a resident of Brooklyn, N. Y. I went over one morning to the Jersey City depot to see some friends off who were starting for the west.—There was a strong draft of air in the depot, and in standing by the train talking to my friends I caught a severe cold. I had no more than reached my home again when I was taken with a sudden chill and then fever set in. The outcome of all was that rheumatism settled all over me. I was entirely helpless. From this I have never recovered.—You see my hands what a state they are in. Those are all chalky swellings and my limbs are very bad. While I remained in Brooklyn I tried all sorts of remedies, but I could never gain any relief. My physician said it was no use. I grew very thin and lost all strength. Finally, after coming here, to gratify my husband, I began to take Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY, and my general health has been better than ever before I am stronger, have an excellent appetite, which I did not have for a long time. It has helped my rheumatism, and with a thorough trial I am in hopes of recovering completely."
Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY has been successfully used by thousands. It will build up a system that has been run down by overwork. It is the thing for the student and literary man to have at hand, and should be in the home of every mechanic. FAVORITE REMEDY is economical, safe and pleasant. Buy it and try it.

KEEP YOUR SCALP CLEAN.
The best thing out for removing Dandruff is
HEYLINGBERG'S
EUREKA DANDRUFF REMOVER.
It has been thoroughly tested by hundreds of gentlemen, Ladies, and Children, and we have plenty of testimonials of its good results. It is cooling, removes Dandruff, invigorates the roots of the hair, and will quickly produce a strong and beautiful growth in all cases where the roots of the hairare not fully dead, and will stop this unpleasant itching; in fact it is the best hair dressing in use. It is not greasy or sticky, and is warranted free of all oils, and poisins, and will prove the cleanest, safest and most economical Hair Dressing to be found.
Peabody, Mass., Nov. 18, 1881.

ONE FOOL AMONG MANY.

WRECKED BY HIS UNTEMPERED AMBITION.—A LIGHTHOUSE ON THE SHOALS.

"I ought to have stopped five years before I did; but I thought it wouldn't amount to anything, so I kept on. I was a fool, of course—but who isn't, when ambition and the chance of making money spurs him on? I only hope I shall get well enough to digest another square meal sometime without a rebellion in my stomach."

The speaker was one of the best known civil engineers and mining experts in this country; hardy by nature as a buffalo, but broken down by hard study and the merciless lashing administered to his mind and body by his own hand during the earlier part of his career. At fifty he is prematurely gray, bent in form and dispirited. Dyspepsia did it—Dyspepsia, the self-inflicted curse of the American in every department of toil.

"I am thirty five years old," writes Mr. Charles H. Watts, of West Somers, Putnam County, N. Y., "and had suffered from dyspepsia for fifteen years. Tried everything.—At last gave PARKER'S GINGER TONIC a chance to show what it could do for me. It proved its ability by curing me. I recommend it to all who are suffering from this terrible desease." Mr.G.R.Cole, druggist, of Carmel, N. Y., certifies to the truth of Mr. Watts' statement.

Gloom, despondency, hopelessness, disgust with all labor, sleeplessness, horrid dreams to render bed-time like the hour of execution to a criminal—these are some of Dyspepsia's foot-prints. The Dyspeptic knows what Coleridge meant when he said: "Night is my hell." PARKER'S GINGER TONIC cures Dyspepsia, purifies the Blood, disperses Rheumatism and all chronic ailments. Prices, 50 cents and $1 a bottle. HISCOX & Co., New York.

COUNTY COMM'RS' NOTICE.

Peabody, March 19th, 1883.

To the Honorable Board of County Commissioners for the County of Essex.

The undersigned respectfully represent, that the public convenience and necessity require that that part of Washington street in Peabody between the northwesterly corner of the estate of Stephen Blaney and the dwelling house belonging to Mrs. Franklin Osborne, Jr., should be widened; also that Lynn street should be widened and straightened, at a point some distance southerly of the dwelling house of Samuel K. Newhall.

We therefore petition your honorable body to view the premises and to take such action in the matter as the public convenience and necessity may seem to you to require.

S. A. SOUTHWICK,
THOMAS J. RELIHAN,
JOHN E. HERRICK,
LEVI PRESTON,
NATHAN H. POOR,
} Selectmen of Peabody.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Essex, ss.

Court of County Commissioners, December Term, A. D. 1882.

On the Petition aforesaid, ordered, That said petioners give notice to all persons and corporations interested therein, that said Commissioners will meet at the Town Hall, in said Peabody, on Friday the twentieth day of April next, at nine o'clock, A. M.—by publishing an attested copy of said Petition, and of this Order thereon, in the Peabody Press, a newspaper printed in Peabody, three weeks successively, the last publication to be fourteen days at least before the said twentieth day of April.—And also by serving the Town Clerk of Peabody with and attested copy of said Petition and this Order, thirty days at least, and by posting up an attested copy thereof in two public places in each of said towns, fourteen days at least before the said twentieth day of April, at which time and place said Commissioners will proceed to view the premises, and take such order in relation to the Prayer of said Petition, as by law they may be authorized to do.

ALFRED A. ABBOTT, Clerk.

A true copy of Petition and Order thereon.

Attest,

ALFRED A. ABBOTT, Clerk.

TOWN OF PEABODY.

Town Collector's Notice.

The owners and occupants of the following described parcels of real estate, situated in the town of Peabody, in the county of Essex, and commonwealth of Massachusetts, and the public, are hereby notified that the taxes thereon assessed for the years hereinafter specified, according to the list committed to me as Collector of Taxes for said town, by the assessors of taxes, remain unpaid, and that said parcels of real estate will be offered at public auction for sale, at the office of the Collector at the Town House in said Town of Peabody, on Wednesday April 18th, 1883,

at 9 o'clock A. M. for the payment of said taxes, together with the costs and charges thereon, unless the same shall be previously discharged:

A lot of land bounded northwardly by Ipswich river, eastwardly by Russell street, southwardly by land of Samuel Hutchinson, westwardly by Middleton line. Taxed to Ripley Bros., (non-residents) for 1881, $1.30, for 1882, $1.62.

A lot of land bounded northwardly by Lowell street, eastwardly by land of Mary E. Stowell, westwardly by Lynnfield line, southwardly by land now or formerly of George Foster, containing about four acres. Taxed to Rufus Hart, (non-resident) for 1881, 65 cents, for 1882, 81 cents.

A lot of land bounded eastwardly by Birch street, southwardly by land of Henry E. Smith, westwardly and northwardly by land of David G. Upton, containing about four acres, with the buildings thereon. Taxed to Elizabeth Hart, (non-resident), for 1881, $3.25 (partly paid), for 1882, $4.05.

A lot of land bounded northwardly by Ipswich, river, eastwardly by land of Wm. P. Upham; southwardly by land of Zephaniah Pope, westwardly by land of John U. Larrabee, containing about two acres. Taxed to Sarah B. Hart, (non-resident), for 1881, 65 cents, for 1882, 81 cents.

A lot of land bounded northwardly and eastwardly by land of Jonathan King, southwardly by Forest street, westwardly by land of Elijah Very, containing about 1 1-2 acres. Taxed to Daniel Very for 1881, $1 95, for 1882, $2.43.

A lot of land bounded northwardly by land of children of John Wilson, eastwardly by the River Road, southwardly by land of Heirs of John Wilson westwardly by Andover street, containing about four acres. Taxed to Samuel W. Wilson for 1881, $13.00, for 1882, $16.29.

A lot of land bounded northwardly by land of Edward D. Trask, eastwardly by land of Stephen Blaney, southwardly by land of John M. Berry, westwardly by Endicott street, containing about 5000 square feet with the buildings thereon. Taxed to John Steele for 1881, $13 65, for 1882. $19.44.

Essex, ss. Probate Court.

To the next of Kin, Creditors, and all other Persons interested in the Estate of DANIEL C. GOODWIN, late of Peabody, in said County, currier, deceased, intestate:

GREETING:

Whereas, application has been made to said Court to grant a letter of administration on the estate of said deceased, to Levi Spaulding, of Peabody, in the county of Essex, or to some other suitable person. You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court, to be held at Salem, in said county of Essex, on the third Monday of April, next, at nine o'clock before noon, to show cause, if any you have, against granting the same. And said Levi Spaulding is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper called the Peabody Press, printed at Peabody, the last publication to be two days at least before said court.

Witness, George F. Choate, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this twenty-seventh day of March, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three.

PNEUMONIA AND CONSUMPTION CONTAGIOUS.—Though not engaged in acute practice we have often read and heard of facts that lead us to regard pneumonia as an infectious fever instead of a mere inflammation of the lungs. This thought again arose when reading of the death of Mrs. Beard within one week after that of her husband, Dr. Beard—both of pneumonia; and still again we are reminded of the same thing by reading of the experience of the German army in the barracks at Wisel. Pneumonia became epidemic there several times, not a year passing without many fatal victims to it. But since the regiment was placed in other quarters and these barracks torn down and utterly destroyed the disease has not again made its appearance. It seems to us very important that this question should be thoroughly investigated, and as soon as possible definitely settled, for if it be true, as many facts in our knowledge and experience makes us believe it is, then people should observe the same precaution in regard to the treatment and nursing of pneumonia cases that they do in managing cases which they now recognize to be infectious or contagious.

Pneumonia is generally regarded as an acute inflammation of the lungs, and consumption as a chronic inflammation. The Koch theory of consumption—that it is due to the ravages of a minute organism called bacillus in the lung tissue, is gaining ground and seems likely to be proven. It is therefore reasonable to suppose that pneumonia, or acute inflammation of the lungs, is due to a more active bacillus and that it should distinctly be classed among zymotic diseases. If, on the other hand, pneumonia should be first proven to be a zymotic or germ disease, then Koch's theory in regard to consumption would find more favor in the eyes of the profession. The probable contagiousness of consumption is not a new idea, though it has in recent years been revived and rediscussed. Books and magazine articles discussing it are frequently brought to our notice, and one of the latest contributions is by Dr. Janeway, of this city, a pathologist of high repute. He cites several instances which certainly tend to prove the contagiousness of consumption, and then goes on to explain why this view is not disproved by the fact that everybody does not take consumption who is about phythisical patients. One of the English medical journals has pointed out the fact that consumption is not common among the nurses in hospitals devoted to the exclusive care of such cases. But, according to the view of Dr. Janeway, this proves nothing more than that these nurses were not susceptible to the disease. If all the remarkable instances going to show that consumption and pneumonia are contagious diseases could be collected they would certainly make a large volume—and a useful one. For such a mass of facts would certainly lead to the general conviction that it isn't well to run any risks with patients suffering from these diseases. While they are sufficiently dangerous to require the unfortunate victims to be separated from the world in pest-houses or denied all cheerful access of friends, yet certain precautions ought to be observed that will render their friends safe.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

A good story is told at the expense of a wellknown Springfield business man's wife. He went home to dinner recently, and while sitting at the table, he took a card having a pair of ear-jewels attached to it from his vest pocket and passed it to his wife. She examined the jewels, looked at her husband and smiled as she passed them to her son; he examined them in turn and asked his father where he obtained them. The guests also joked with him about "prize packages," "dollar jewelry stores," and the like, so the host put the card back in his pocket and nothing more was said on the subject. A few days ago the man's wife asked him where he obtained "those cheap earjewels." "Oh," said he, carelessly, "I returned them to the man who brought them into my place. They only cost $950, and if you had liked them they would have been yours, but as they would always have seemed 'cheap' to you I thought I would not invest in diamonds till my wife and son were better judges of real stones." That woman is ready to "club herself" whenever she thinks of her lost opportunity, and the subject of diamonds is a forbidden one in the household.

A tourist leaning out of a nook,
Fell on his head near a brook,
The hurt he received,
St. Jacobs Oil relieved,
And he says it cured "like a book."

Great oaks from little acorns spring,
Great aches the little toe-corns bring;
But for every corn
That ever was born,
St. Jacobs Oil is just the thing.

Napoleon was but 26 years old when he crossed the Alps; Alexander Hamilton but 18, when intrusted with a national mission; William Pitt but 24, when he became the English Premier; and Charles Fox but 19, when in full sway in the House of Commons

Recommended by Physicians.

Dr. W. C. Sylvester says: "I have examined the formula of the Shaker Liniment, and I use it in my family and recommend it to all sufferers from Neuralgia and Rheumatism. It is better than any other liniment."

A. Hanson, Boston Wire Works, 75 to 81 Cornhill, says: "My wife was cured of Neuralgia.—Four applications cured me of Rheumatism, and Mr. Lord, my neighbor, who has been on crutches fifteen years, obtained relief from less than one bottle of the Shaker Liniment."

Chas. Prescott, Merchant, Randolph, says: "Send me three dozen Shaker Liniment. My customers have confidence in it, and I can consistently recommend it."

Dr. U. K. Mayo, 378 Tremont street, says: "It is the most effective remedy that ever came to my notice, and I cheerfully recommend it."

An Old Nurse says: "If the directions are followed, not one case of croup in a thousand will prove fatal."

J. F. Sawtell, 124 Cambridge street, was cured of Rheumatism, and says: "The Shaker Liniment cured me, and I would advise Rheumatics to use it."

The Boston Traveller says: "Such cures (Mr. Sawtell's) place The Shaker Liniment at the head of all Rheumatic remedies."

Mrs. C. A. Sylvester of the Sawin Academy Sherborn, who was cured of Neuralgia of the heart, says: "Its effects are almost magical. I will cheerfully recommend it to my friends."

E. N. Cummings, the well known Sunday-school worker, formerly of Woburn, now of the firm of Welsh & Cummings, Lynn, says: "The Shaker Liniment cured my wife of an Enlarged Joint, and myself of Acute Inflammation."

A. C. H. Lewis, Framingham, says: "It gave me quick relief for Rheumatism, and it is the best liniment that I ever used."

Hon. A. Maynard, the extensive manufacturer and founder of the town of Maynard, Mass., who was cured of Neuralgia, says: "By the use of the Shaker Liniment I obtained almost immediate relief and unhesitatingly recommend it to my friends."

L. H. Allen, Station Agent at Rockbottom, says: "I received decided benefit from the Shaker Liniment for Rheumatism, and I have not heard of a case of Neuralgia or Rheumatism that it has not benefitted."

L. J. Jeffs, the well known manufacturer of Hudson and Boston, says: "I have seen such proofs of the efficacy of the Shaker Liniment for Neuralgia that I heartily recommend it."

J. E. Brugerton, Manager of the "Golden Rule," says: "The Shaker Liniment gave me immediate relief. It is a wonderful remedy."

Dramatic and Musical.

No pains have been spared, nor has there been any limit to outlay, in the reigning production of sensational drama on the stage of the Boston Theatre. All the scenes in the play are new, and every one of them reflects high credit upon the Messrs. Getz and their associates. Nothing has been seen to surpass in effectiveness the great railway wreck scene, now admirably managed in every detail; and if there was ever a more realistic stage crowd than that which surges about the broken bank in one of the finest tableaux of the piece, we have never been fortunate enough to see or hear it. The acting in "£50,000" is all that could be desired; the curtain falls on the final scene at a very seasonable hour; and the production should attract a series of brilliant audiences.

At the Park Theatre, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Florence still continue, and last Monday night "An Old Stager," the latest accession to the repertory of these popular stars, was brought out to a large audience. Mr. George H. Jessup and Mr. William Gill are the joint authors and the scene is laid in the "old country." It serves to introduce Mr. and Mrs. Florence at their best, and will be a justly popular play for them. This is the last week of the Florences, who are to be succeeded by the Madison Square Company in "The Professor."

"My Partner" is the attraction at the Globe this week, and will be greeted with full houses, as Aldrich and Parsloe always are. Next week "Monte Cristo," which was so well received at Booth's Theatre, New York. James O'Neill will be seen as Edmond Dantes and the Count, and Henry Lee is to be the Noirtier.

Most extensive preparations have been made for the second production of the season at the Bijou—"Pounce & Co.," written and composed by B. E. Woolf, critic of the Saturday Evening Gazette, a successful dramatist and skilled musician, in whose new work much interest is shown. Its first representation will be given on Thursday evening of next week, the 18th inst. Entirely new scenery and costumes, including some charming Kate Greenaway attire, will characterize the production; and the cast gives promise of decided success for "Pounce & Co."

Margaret Mather's tour through New England has been a succession of triumphs before large audiences. She appears in Salem, April 19th, and she will undoubtedly repeat her success there.

The ten performances of the "Equine Paradox" at Mechanic Hall the past week have drawn more people than any performance ever given in Salem. The actual figures of the attendance gives 14,839 persons. This for a city of 28,000 inhabitants is unequalled, and the management are to be congratulated on their success.

The Boston Globe "Young Man around town says: "It would be news of good cheer if Mr. Field of the Boston Museum could find some one to don the mantle of Sadie Martinot, which, since that lady made her exit last season, has remained unfilled.

Friday night Barlow & Wilson's Minstrels are to appear in Salem. To see Schoolcraft & Coes is alone worth the price of admission, and yet this is only a small part of the attractions. All lovers of good minstrelsy will not fail to see them.

Next Monday evening Leavitt's Gigantean Minstrels will return to Mechanic Hall, under the local management of Moulton & Johnson, when in addition to the usual variety there will be presented a burlesque on "Patience" which has been received with great applause everywhere. Seats now for sale at Ropes'.

The sale of seats for Margaret Mather in Romeo and Juliet, begins at Ropes', Monday, April 16th. Moulton & Johnson will also bring Lotta to Salem, May 2d.

A crowded house greeted the Boston Museum Company in the "School for Scandal" last evening. This play brings out the full strength of the company, including Warren, Mrs. Vincent, Barron, and Annie Clark, all of whom were the recipients of hearty applause when they appeared on the stage.

Our former townsman Wm. B. Hammond, formerly connected with this office, but now of the Georgetown Advocate, recently paid a visit to Peabody and he speaks as follows, in his paper, of his native town: The moment one leaves the outskirts of the village after being cooped up within its limits for three years or more, he begins to see a change in the landscape. Forests have been removed, underbrush cleared up, meadows drained, and the sights upon every hand, is proof that the county is growing, and the nearer one gets towards the cities, he is the more convinced that the world is moving fast. Business activity does not much present itself, except in the occupation of the land, until the town of Peabody is reached. Here, the importance of the hide and leather industry presents itself in the numerous spur tracks at the railroad station, making inroads upon the hills we used to climb, the ponds we used to skate and sail upon, the cars upon them mostly filled with that necessary commodity to the tanner, hemlock bark. But let us look a little further. Upon the brow of that eminence is a huge iron tank, which signifies that Peabody has, almost at one leap, gone from hand pumps, and hand engines, to steam engines and high pressure service. Nor is this all, a model engine house, filled with modern machinery for the suppression of fires, two steamers, one with water heated to the boiling point, are ready at a moment's warning, while a magnificent hook and ladder truck, and horse hose carriage are at their sides, ready for the start. Within a stone's throw is the new town hall, towering towards the sky, evidence of growth and prosperity, with an audience room designed to seat sixteen hundred people, the police court room, lockups, for the unruly, and rooms for the water board, and the various other town officials. Opposite is the Peabody Press Office, that great aid in all enterprises, that great enlightener of the masses, in all prosperous localities, a weekly newspaper, bearing upon its front, a portrait of the town's literary benefactor, George Peabody. Just beyond this, towards Salem, is a magnificent shaft, fitting tribute to those who fell for freedom's cause. Such attractions are not alone the result of prosperity and wealth. There must be push, and Peabody is well represented with this element. Among the many, we will only name Stephen Blaney and his son Francis. The former, born of poor and industrious parents, buffeted the storm of adversity, and, rising upon the crest, has laid out new streets, built scores of houses, enhanced the value of real estate, and now, a little past the meridian of life, overlooks his farm of an hundred acres, while, ever watchful of the interests of the town, he is busy in its behalf. Frank, endowed with the qualities of his father, has represented the state a number of times, and with a clear head, has advocated and persistently maintained an advanced position. A sketch of him was given us by a citizen in this wise. When attending the councils of the town, "he takes a back seat in a remote corner of the hall, and as is often the case, a tangle in the question at issue, will present itself, and in the height of the controversy, a voice will be heard from the corner, clear and distinct, 'Mr. Moderator.' In an instant the hall is quiet, and after a pause, his voice rings in the air, carrying with it the will of the large assembly coupled with his own," and today, Peabody is greatly indebted to him for the substantial manner in which it has expended its appropriations.

Mr. David Conrad, at his Pavilion in Salem, has his window full of a great bargain in Dress Goods, at 8 cents per yard—worth 25 cents. He is also making a specialty of Sateens, on which he is making very low prices.

Spring Millinery is now ready at REITH'S — and by the looks of the weather, the ladies will be ready for he Millinery right away. Don't forget Reith.

Attention is called to the new and comfortable coupe of our popular young hackman, Henry C. Wilson. Having taken great pains to meet the wants of the public, he has had his coupe newly fitted throughout and with the addition of two good horses, he is better than ever prepared to do all work the public may favor him with.

The Essex Universalist Sunday School Union holds its annual meeting in Salem to-day. Services at 2.30 and 7. P. M. The afternoon session, conducted as an Institute. At the evening session Rev. C. E. Nash of Newtonville, followed by Rev. J. C. Snow of Haverhill and others, will speak upon "How to cultivate piety in the young."

Alfred H. Crane, a well-known and popular conductor on the Eastern Railroad for several years past, has taken the position of station and freight master at Lynn, made vacant by the retirement of Wm. H. Boss. Mr. Boss has been eleven years in the employ of the road. He is to be manager of the Avery Car Coupler Company in Boston.

We call particular attention to the advertisement of Ira F. Pray, who has placed on his counters to-day a manufacturer's stock of boots and shoes at very low prices. It will pay our readers to look in at Mr. Pray's store. His assortment for the spring trade is unusually large and well selected, and our readers may be sure of courteous and prompt attention to their wants.

Improvements in the science of dress fitting are at present as marked as in any department of life. Miss Carleton, of Peabody, at Almy, Bigelow & Webber's, has received the highest commendations for the methods adopted by her, that are entirely new in this city. The garments are easy, yet perfect fitting under all changes of position by the wearer.

The annual meeting of the second corps of Cadets was held at the armory last Friday evening, Lieut.-Col. Hobbs presiding, when the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Captain, Walter C. Harris; treasurer and clerk, Andrew Fitz; finance committee, J. Frank Dalton, Edward A. Maloon, John Pickering, Benj. F. Brown, Chas. Johnson; uniform committee, Chas. Butland, Chas. E. Galeucia, Frank S. Horton, Henry P. Nourse.

A change has lately been made in regard to forwarding letters and other mail matter to a new address, which it will be well to remember. Mail matter can no longer be forwarded without additional postage equal to the original amount. Letters can be sent and marked "Due" and the new postage collected of the recipient but on postals, papers, and other matter the postage must be prepaid before it can be forwarded.

The Marshfield Mail has the following to say of a Peabody young lady, daughter of Mr. John S. Torr; "The Cornhill School closed Friday with the annual examination. The teacher, Miss H. A. Torr, of Peabody, is new to us, but has had considerable experience in teaching before coming to Marshfield; and the examination showed what earnest, faithful work can accomplish and reflected credit on teacher and scholars."

James C. George and Benj. Symonds have recently torn down at West Peabody, a building 16 foot square, which it is claimed was the first schoolhouse built in Toppsfield, and which was afterward sold and moved to Danvers Plains where it was again used for a school-house, and then sold to W. Flint and moved to West Peabody, where it has since remained, latterly the property of the late Nath'l Flint, and used as a shoe shop.—Mirror.

The appointments for the Methodist Church in the New England Conference have been announced. The new pastor for this town is Rev. C. N. Smith, whose last appointment was Ipswich. Rev. W. M. Ayers is appointed for Tapleyville. Among the clergymen who have been stationed here at various times we notice that Rev. Dr. Steele has been appointed to Reading; Rev. Daniel Wait to Brookfield; Rev. Albert Gould to Clinton; Rev. V. M. Simons to Florence street, Springfield; Rev. W. G. Leonard, to Brookline; Rev. J. O. Knowles to Webster Square, Worcester; Rev. S. B. Sweester to Elm Street, Gloucester.

At the annual meeting of the Baptist Society held on Monday evening, April 9th, the following officers were chosen; Moderator, P. D. Perkins; Clerk, A. C. Osborne; Standing Committee, P. D. Perkins, Albert Vittum, and Isaiah Chute; Treasurer, Daniel Woodbury; Collector, Alden F. Rowell; Musical Committee, Daniel Woodbury and Eri Littlefield. The financial condition of the society was reported in a more healthy condition than last year. It was voted to raise the usual amount for the current expenses the coming year. The subject of a new pastor was discussed, and the name of W. P. Chipman of Davisville, R. I. was favorably received.

VOL. 24. PEABODY, MASS., WEDNESDAY EVENING, APRIL 18, 1883. NO. 17.

OH! WHAT CAN THE MATTER BE?

Only This, Wilmot's Watches Beat 45c Sleds

Out and out, and Low Prices, Square Dealings. Good Goods and lots of them, bring trade, and that is what we have got, and that's what's the matter with our competitor. Our competitor who sports the CIGAR SHOP SIGN, seems to feel bad, and we don't blame him, but he must remember that old Dame Fortune is a great tilter of trade, and if she has seen fit to put us on the upward slant he should not feel so bad and tell everybody about it, but keep it to himself and try to do better next time.

☞ TO THE PUBLIC. We don't believe in mud throwing and don't believe in that way of doing business, but if our competitor wishes, we will make it a specialty, (as he has been in the habit of doing,) for his special benefit, and he may be able to get a few points.

WE WILL NOW DROP BOY'S PLAY AND COME TO BUSINESS.

During the next 30 days we shall offer some of the best bargains ever seen in the Clothing business at 25 per cent. less than any firm in this city, (we make no exceptions.) Remember that we are the only dealer in Essex County that manufactures their own clothing—we make no exception, consequently we can and do sell lower than any other house in the city. At the same time we give every man or boy who buys a Suit of Clothes or Spring Overcoat for $10.00 or more, a Genuine Nickel Silver stem-winding Watch, Chain and Charm, valued at $6.00.

☞ Remember that every watch we give is warranted a perfect time keeper, as we don't believe in cheap trifles, such as 45c sleds, or cheap pasteboard trinkets, as some of our competitors are in the habit of giving. If you don't want a watch we will give you instead

AN ELEGANT NICKEL CLOCK.

And to every boy who buys clothing to the amount of $8.00 or more, we shall give

A Splendid Pair of ROLLER SKATES valued at $3.00.

Or to every boy who buys Clothing to the amount of $5.00 or more, we shall give

A Fine BAT and BALL valued at $1.50.

N. B.—We wish it distinctly understood that the prices on our goods remain the same in every respect, and that what we give you we give as a free gift.

☞ Our sole reason for giving away the gifts that we do is that we wish to introduce to the public our enormous stock of Clothing, which they will find far superior to any they have ever seen before.

We are now prepared to show the largest stock of Men's and Boys' Clothing ever shown in Essex county at the following prices.

Men's Suits, $6, 8, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 18, 20 to 30.

Men's Pantaloons, 75c, 1.50, 1.75, 2, 2.25, 2.50, 3, 3.50, 4, 4.50 to 8.

Boys' Suits, $1.50, 2.50, 3, 3.25, 3.50 4, 4.50, 5, 7, 8, 10 to 15.

Boys' Pants, 40c, $1, 1.50, 2, 2.50, 3, 3.50, 4, 4.50 to 5.

In our Custom Department

We are showing the largest and finest line of Cloths ever seen in Salem, at the following low prices :

Suits made to order,	$15, 18, 20, 22, 25 to 40.
Pantaloons made to order,	$4, 4.75, 5, 6, 7 to 11.
Spring Overcoats made to order,	$13, 15, 18, 20, 22 to 30.

Hats, Caps and Furnishing Goods.

In this department will be found all the novelties of the season, which we shall offer at nearly wholesale prices.

Have you seen the Grand Display of Wax Figures in our large show windows? If you have not it will pay you to come miles to see them. We give you all a cordial invitation to Come and see for Yourself.

That our stock is larger than any three stores in Salem, our prices 22 per cent. less than any dealer in Essex county, and our styles better than ever seen in any Clothing House in the state.

STRICTLY ONE PRICE.

WEST PEABODY.

The discussion of the town report was resumed last Friday night at the West Peabody Farmers' Club. After singing by the Chorus Club, and reading of the records of the last meeting, Mr. James P. King took the floor. Referring to the criticisms of Mr. Spaulding last week, Mr. King said he proposed to begin where Mr. Spaulding left off, at the department of the Overseers of the Poor. It was true that there were twenty years ago eighty paupers in the Alms House—now only sixty. But in those times provisions of all kinds were cheaper than now. Molasses was 70 cents per gallon; good corned beef could be bought for $4.00 per hundred weight. This was just prior to the opening of the war; when low prices prevailed. He admitted that it had cost a good deal for the support of the poor; it would continue to do so until an evil was removed which was the cause of a large part of the poverty in our town. There were two classes of poor in town; a few leave the Alms House and become good citizens, but the most of them would remain there all their life. It may be because we feed them too well. Now in regard to the poor who apply for aid, it has been said that undeserving people are helped, and within two weeks a citizen had said to him that they were helping a family who should not receive aid from the town. Mr. King asked him if he would take a week and look the case in question up. He did so and shortly after meeting him, the gentleman said: "Mr. King, I have investigated the matter and I find you are doing your duty." In this case the husband was a drunkard, —but the mother and five children could not be refused aid. At present we are helping about sixty-nine families outside of the Alms House: about half of them are widows having an average of five children. Rum is the cause of the poverty in nearly every case. The overseers have tried to ascertain if they were helping any undeserving people, and every case was thoroughly investigated. Take the case of the man in Mr. Spaulding's section of the town, to which reference was made last week. It was asserted that he could chop a cord of wood a day. Well, Mr. King said, if he could, he wouldn't. His wife was taken sick and they bridged them over one week, and they have received no help from the town since. In this location there are few poor; at present there are three families receiving aid from the town. The question had been asked why one of these families was not removed to the Alms House. It is not pleasant to speak of, but if that family could be taken to the Alms House and supported for 75 cents per day, their condition was such that we would not insult the inmates by removing them there. Another case is of a man eighty-one years old. Mr. King had employed this man in chopping wood for him at times. It was not his fault that he was poor; it was the fault of those who lived under his roof, but he was an industrious citizen. Three years ago Dr. Pike came to him, in the night, to go to the house of a man who was or had been under the influence of liquor. His wife was not much better. The man had caught typhoid fever by lying in the street, in the gutter. But there were five children, in a starving condition, and he had provided for that family. If only one pauper had been found dead by the roadside, through neglect of the overseers of the poor, what a hue and cry would be raised by the town? If there were only one case of starvation, the town would have had all they wanted of the Board. We are not helping a single family whom we can consistently cut off. Do you suppose any one would be more ready to save money to the town? The cases of poverty arise from a peculiar class bordering on our large cities. Two-thirds of these people came across the water. They were not born in this country, but they came here and the nation has welcomed them; they belong to us and we have got to provide for them. If a man lives five years in town, and has paid a tax three years, and becomes poor, he has as good a right to the support from the town as a native born citizen.

Mr. King explained the seven per cent. loans. In 1873 there was a panic, and money loaned for eight and ten per cent. The town clerk applied to the State for $50,000, and was able to hire at seven per cent. if they would take it for ten years, otherwise they could not hire it at even 10 per cent. Quite a number of towns were ahead of our town, but finally our turn came and $50,000 was hired. The money must be had. The Savings Banks, while they could only receive $1000 from any individual, had a right to loan any amount and $50,000 was hired of the Savings Bank at seven per cent. It could not be hired any less, and then only for a long term of years. If the town had hired money for ten years at four per cent. and there had come a panic and money was worth eight per cent., Mr. Spaulding would not have said a word. Last week Mr. Spaulding had said the town debt was $363,000. Mr. King said the entire debt was $459,000. A large item in this debt was the Water Works. He had voted—and was proud to say it—for the purchase of the Salem and Danvers aqueduct. We had only the benefit of the high service a part of the year; yet it has nearly paid the interest on the investment and at this rate it will not be many years before the water works will pay every dollar of interest on the town debt. We live in an age of progress. We are not satisfied with the methods of forty years ago. We had built engine houses, school houses, and a town house. In reference to the new town building, Mr. King referred to the fact that ten years ago, the town came within six votes of building it.

In regard to the town clerk, who received last year $1560, is it high? Why, here are our bank officers and other officials who have regular hours of business, work only five hours and receive $1500 and $2000. Mr. Poor could be found at the town house at seven o'clock in the morning, and at any time of the day or night. It made no difference—a young man came to him at 10 o'clock at night to get a marriage license; he had sworn in officials in the night time—he was ready at all times. You can go to him and find out any transaction for twenty-five years back, and the records will be correct. An inducement was offered him some years ago, where he could earn a larger salary than he now obtained, but he was, somehow, so attached to the town that he preferred to remain here. Our Selectmen —are they paid high? They meet half a day, Saturday afternoons; get $1.50. If Farmer Herrick had to hire a team to go to the meeting, how much would be left for himself? Mr. Spaulding thought the school department the cleanest thing in the town. He was once a schoolmaster, and it was natural for him to think so. In regard to the overseers of the poor, he had been overseer for fifteen years at $10 per year. The chairman now has $300, and if any of the ladies present had their husband liable to be disturbed at all times, paupers calling at the back door and front door, they would think $300 was little enough. The salaries of the school teachers were not high. One of our best teachers was employed in Rockville and got $4.00 per week. Out of this she had to pay her board, and at the end of the school year of about thirty-nine weeks she had $80, not enough to dress most of the ladies of our day. Mr. Ham only receives $1400. It was at one time $1800. The salary of the High School teacher was raised in war times and then put down again. Mr. King thought we had made a mistake in dropping from the School Board one of our most valued citizens to the town. Mr. King admitted that taxes on real estate had increased. He did not believe half of the property of the town was in real estate. This is a progressive age. We must make improvements. We have only one life to live. What if we do spend a little money? Let us enjoy ourselves, for we can carry nothing with us. We have built our town house, and there will be now no earthly reason for building town houses, or engine houses, and our debt will diminish. In regard to the fire department we had bought a new hook and ladder truck, and in regard to those $900 horses, he had been told that a responsible party stood ready to-day to purchase them of the town at that price. As to the firemen, the chief engineer gets $50, assistants $30, and the men about $15 each. He didn't believe for the time spent that it would pay. Mr. King closed by speaking a good word for the firemen, whom he thought were poorly paid.

Rev. Mr. Spaulding said he had the kindest regard and most friendly feeling for all in authority in our town; all the charge he made is that, half unconsciously, they had led our town into too heavy expenses. There were many kinds of blindness—color blindness, and official blindness, with which we were likely to be afflicted in our day. He referred to Dorsey and the Star route thieves, and to the investigation at the Tewksbury Almshouse, claiming that the administration was troubled with official blindness. The only charge he could make against his respected friend was that he was afflicted with official blindness. For more than 14 years he had occupied his position on the board. During the first year of the existence of the town, the sum of $800 had been netted to the town; in 1883 he had drawn on the town for $10,272.48. The average number of paupers the first year was 80—now 49. Markets go up and down; interest varied from year to year, but he found that the figures in this department went steadily in one direction. The cost of the poor is onward and upward; expenses are increasing each year, and the number diminishing. He had come to the conclusion that it would be doomsday for the town if they ever should get down to one pauper. Let us pray for an abundance of paupers. Mr. Spaulding then gave some statistics showing from the different town reports of each year, that the expenses had increased. They had been expediting the expenses from $4900 in 1866 to over $10,000 in 1883. In the expenses outside the alms house, the last year the town was together, there was expended $608, with a population nearly what it is now, Not till 1861 was there much of an increase, when $793 was expended, and they kept on increasing until last year they were $4982. He questioned if all this money outside of the Alms House had been properly expended. As a clergyman he had had something to do with caring for the poor. He had come years and years ago to the conclusion that he was very likely to be deceived. He had been so in very many cases. He doubted if this large expenditure was properly distributed. Mr. Spaulding here gave an instance that had been related to him, where a cord of wood had been sent over to a woman in Wyoma who sold it for $1.50—and probably got drunk on it. (Mr. King here said that the statement was untrue, as the overseers never gave a cord of wood at one time to any one.) Mr. Spaulding then referred to other cases, and insisted that the items in regard to these expenditures should be published. There appeared by the town records that 200 barrels of flour had been distributed to about 65 families. (Mr. King said 700 persons had been helped during the year.) Have you, said Mr. Spaulding, a record of just the amount distributed to each person? Mr. King replied in the affirmative very decidedly. The items of fuel, meal, grain and groceries were then taken up, and compared, the last year with preceding years, being very nearly a repetition of what he said last week. He insisted again that the items should be published, and that the town should follow the lead of Danvers in this respect. Mr. King explained that in Danvers the work was done differently—orders were given out for everything—and went on to say that it cost Danvers more in proportion than it did us. (Mr. Spaulding would not listen to this. Danvers was evidently a good enough comparison for Mr. Spaulding's purpose, but when it was quoted against him it had nothing to do with the question.—Ed. Press.) Mr. Spaulding said the overseers had expedited their salaries. Before the division of the town they received $170; now $350—a gain of 100 per cent. In reference to the increase from $10 to $25, he was surprised that they should go as small as that. He would have something or nothing. Yet at that price they earned as much as on the farm. Mr. King was here asked if he was as careful in the purchase of meat and butter—to get the best—as for his own table? He wanted to know if the best was the cheapest for paupers. For himself he (Mr. S.) believed it was. Reference was then made to some tainted mutton used at the Alms House, and butter so rancid that it could not be eaten. Mr. King had never heard of it, said if there was, at any time, the inmates were not compelled to eat it. This was denied by a gentleman in the audience, who proved to be T. C. Durkee, who was employed at one time on the farm. In the midst of the confusion which followed it was also stated that Ira Foster sold it, and that he was present. (Mr. Foster did not deny it.) Mr. Spaulding said he considered the school department the cleanest in the town, and the poor department the nastiest.

Mr. Spaulding next paid his respects to Mr. Poor. He entertained a high regard for the town clerk. He was not to be blamed for taking fat salaries. The blame rested with the voters of Peabody. The PRESS had said the speaker knew little of his labors. He admitted that was true. There were many mysteries connected with the office he would like to fathom. Was obliged to the PRESS for the information, that we had a historian in the chair of the clerk of the town. He also agreed with the PRESS that he was likely to get a higher salary before it was lower. The tendency was to higher salaries. The town clerk had started in 1857 with a salary of $300, then it was $500 in 1871, $600 in 1872, $750 in 1878, and later $800, an increase of 200 per cent. The farmers toiled all the year and got nothing; the town clerk got two and three dollars a day whether he worked or not. This was not his only office. He was on the board of selectmen—started with $70—it had been steadily expedited to $370, an increase of 400 per cent. He was town treasurer —started with $100— got up to $300. But the reddest plum was the treasury of the sinking fund. It was like the manna which dropped down from heaven. For several years he also drew $400 as treasurer of the water board. He also at some of the time had received money for sweeping the school house, and for paying money for state aid. Adding all together, he has been receiving from six to seven dollars a day through the year. It was not right for farmers who could earn but one dollar per day, to vote to pay six dollars to a man for a service which they might perform.

The same course had been pursued with general expenditures. The Selectmen of Danvers the last year the towns were together drew $462. Last year our Selectmen drew $1393.50. The town treasurer, before the division, was paid $50, all the office is worth. With the exception of the $100 salary for the sinking fund there is not an office that pays as well at that price. The town clerk of Danvers has $100—of Peabody $800. The expenses of the fire department the first year were $2554, now $10,485. Are we any safer now than then? The only fire the first year of our existence as a separate town was at the Poor House, and that was a dead loss to the town. The cost of constables that year was $35.00, now our police cost $5762.70. Don't believe we are any safer now than under that constabulary. The first year it cost $100 to light the town, now it has gone rapidly up to $2523.26. It is said that the longest road has an end, but the expediters road has no end. Our taxes have increased from seven mills on a dollar to sixteen. Mr. Spaulding said he would not be pleased with casting a vote for the purchase of the Danvers and Salem aqueduct, a line of pipe that had been rusting for generations, which was cut off and sold to the town for 400 per cent. more than it was worth. It was worth absolutely nothing. It cost $125,000, and could have been bought for $25,000 Our water supply should have come from one pond, not from two ponds bordered by a graveyard. He thought our water would ultimately come from Humphrey's pond.

In regard to Jumbo (meaning the new town hall) Mr Spaulding said Peabody had done many foolish things, but in creating Jumbo she had "capped the climax." He had lately visited it, and the thirty sleeping apartments, making him think only of the catacombs of Rome. He had ascended to the second story, to the inner chamber, lighted only on one end. They had got a Newburyport architect. It was the last place he should think of going for an architect. The only piece of architecture in that city was the steeple of a church, built one hundred years ago. It looked more like a New York bonded warehouse than a public building. Then the large hall, about as ample as the heavens. The gallery will seat five hundred people. Every man, woman and child in Peabody could be comfortably located in some part of the building. All this for a large upper room. What are we going to do with it? It will take $1000 a year to insure it; $1000 to light it, and a janitor. Why, here is another office for the man who was born in the same year with Mr. King. The difference between value and valuation was then touched upon. The tax of the town before it was divided was two mills on a dollar. It was doubled the first year of our existence as an independent town. Farming property was not worth one dollar more than twenty-five years ago. It was impossible to increase the value, but the valuation would go steadily up from sixteen to twenty-five mills. The tax on his farm in 1805 was $11.34. It was not worth a dollar more for farming now than then. A tax bill was then shown which Mr. Spaulding said was the oldest in existence. It was the tax on his farm in 1790. It was made out to Elijah Pope and signed John Smith, collector. The town tax was 8*s.* 6*d.*; the state tax 2*s.* 5*d.* The town in 1852 was taxed for $3500; now $11,000. The property is not worth any more. The value has not increased, but the valuation has. Within twenty years, at this rate, the tax will be two and one-half mills, which will amount to a practical confiscation of the real estate. Yet this was a modern age. If it meant drifting toward bankruptcy he would prefer to live in another age. We had sunk one fifteenth of all the property earned since the landing at Plymouth Rock. The end will be bankruptcy, poverty and destruction.

The discussion will be continued next week, with J. S. Needham as the opening speaker.

In the discussions on the Town Report at West Peabody thus far, Rev. Mr. Spaulding has occupied nearly all the time. He has spoken about five hours thus far—his remarks last Friday evening being in many respects but a repetition of what he said the first evening. Many of his statements could be refuted, if he would give any one else an opportunity. There are two sides to this as every question, and if the facts are what he is after, an opportunity should be given for the other side to be heard. If each speaker could be limited to half an hour, or thereabouts, there would be an opportunity for discussion. As it is there has been none. It has been all one way.

Poet's Corner.

Je L'adore.

BY H. S. G.

She was born in an old fashioned farm-house,
This maiden winning and gay,
She was loved by all who knew her,
So charming her innocent way.

Her home was a peaceful village,
Far removed from the cities' strife,
And there, through years of maidenhood,
She passed her quiet life.

She was a sylph-like, gentle creature
And from the depths of her hazel eyes,
When troubled with sadness or sorrow,
The tides of her soul would arise.

Her face was a delicate oval
Like the Grecian of long ago,
Her skin of the clearest and purest,
As white as the unstained snow.

Except on each cheek was a rose tint
Like the blush of the queen of flowers,
As she sits in her modest beauty,
'Mid the depths of her blossoming bowers.

Her mouth was sweet and expressive,
Clear cut twixt her ruby lips,
And from out its rosy ripeness,
Peeped forth those pearly tips,

Which seemed like the gates of her feelings,
For whene'er a laugh lit her face,
They appeared in their white, pearly lustre
And smiled as they watched the chase

Of the ripples of merry laughter
Which like the song of a bird,
Seems filled with Heavenly music,
And entrances where'er it is heard.

Her hair was black as the raven,
And when arranged in a careless coil,
She excelled Bœtia's maiden
When crowned with the olive tree's spoil.

And her hand was small and shapely,
Finer far than Phidias wrought,
When from out the passive marble,
Burst the ideal master's thought.

Her form was that of the goddess
Diana, Diana of old,
Whose rare and voluptuous beauty,
Has again and again been told.

Her ear out-rivalled the sea-shell,
Half hid 'neath the shining sand,
As it nestles its pretty pink whiteness,
By the waves of the Spice Island's strand.

She was a dear, sweet little creature,
And I cannot begin to write,
Of the sound of her lark-like warblings,
Of her eyes which beamed such a light.

Of course she knew she was lovely,
And loved her winning way,
And yet when I called her beautiful,
She looked so full of dismay.

That I feared I had wounded her feelings,
For she blushed to her temples white
As she said in tremulous accents,
"Now don't, you know 'tisn't right."

An April Girl.

The girl that is born on an April day
Has a right to be merry, lithesome, gay;
And that is the reason I dance and play
And frisk like a mote in a sunny ray—
Wouldn't you
Do it, too,
If you had been born on an April day?

The girl that is born on an April day
Has also a right to cry, they say;
And so I sometimes do give way
When things get crooked or all astray—
Wouldn't you
Do it, too,
If you had been born on an April day?

The girls of March love noise and fray;
And sweet as blossoms are girls of May;
But I belong to the time mid-way—
And so I rejoice in a sunny spray
Of smiles and tears and hap-a day—
Wouldn't you
Do, it too,
If you had been born on an April day?

Heigh ho! and hurrah! for an April day.
Its cloud, its sparkle, its skip and stay!
I mean to be happy whenever I may,
And cry when I must, for that's my way,
Wouldn't you
Do it, too,
If you had been born on an April day?

My Mother's Hymn.

Like patient saint of olden time,
With lovely face almost divine,
So good, so beautiful and fair,
Her very attitude a prayer;
I heard her sing so low and sweet,
"His loving kindness—oh, how great;"
Turning beheld the saintly face,
So full of trust and patient grace.

"He justly claims a song from me,
His loving kindness—oh, how free;"
Sweetly thus did run the song,
"His loving kindness," all day long,
Trusting, praising, day by day,
She sang the sweetest roundelay—
"He near my soul hath always stood,
His loving kindness—oh, how good."

"He safely leads my soul along,
His loving kindness—oh, how strong;"
So strong to lead her on the way,
To that eternal better day,
Where safe at last in that blest home,
All care and weariness are gone.
She "sings with rapture and surprise
His loving kindness in the skies."

Selected Story.

Decided by a Freshet.

BY MARY REED CROWELL.

"Yes," Louise Raymond said, nodding her head so that the golden-brown hair on her forehead danced coquettishly up and down—"yes, I am pretty, but I don't think I am sufficiently beautiful to send all the young men of my acquaintance into ecstasies over me; and yet I know I am pretty."

And as she gazed composedly into the depths of the mirror, she took from her belt a withered white rose, and a bunch of faded pink hyacinths, and then arched her pretty eyebrows over them in a puzzled fashion.

"Philip Marion gave me the roses," she soliloquized. "Philip is a very handsome fellow, and I always had a weakness for handsome fellows; and besides, they say he is a rising young man in his professior. Well, I like talented lawyers, too, so I will keep the roses a little while. And here are Max Hubert's hyacinths—poor, silent, awkward Max! And yet there is something about him that won't let you despise him. He certainly is not handsome, and yet his face reminds you of one of those old marble creations one sees in the Academy of Design. Well, I won't throw the hyacinths away, either—at any rate not till I come back from Grandma Carlisle's."

A few days before, Grandma Carlisle had written a piteous letter to her stepson up in town, setting forth that she was not feeling at all well this winter, and was so lonesome she did not know what to do with herself, and begging one of her three granddaughters to come down and stay with her awhile.

And Louise had astonished the whole family by volunteering to go.

"My dear child," Mrs. Raymond had said, "you don't know what you are undertaking. It is a common farm-house, and so awfully lonesome!"

"And the old lady is as full of whims as an old lady can be," the elder sister, Augusta, said. "Indeed you may go, for all me!"

"Well," Louise had declared, "I am tired of balls and dancing, and twelve-o'clock suppers, and matinees; and I mean to go and try the other extreme—just for fun."

"You will find it anything but fun, my dear," Mrs. Raymond rejoined, adjusting her eye-glasses upon her aristocratic nose.

"Well, at any rate, I mean to try," Louise persisted, valiantly, "and, papa, I want you to write to grandma that I am coming."

* * * * * * *

The scene was indescribably beautiful to Louise Raymond that frosty winter night, as the jostling, lumbering old wagon, with a buffalo-robe thrown over the seat and the sleepy old horses trotting along in front, came into the turn of the road from which she could see the ancient farm-house, brown with a half-century of suns and rains, while the brown, wooded hills rose up on every side, and one ruddy beam of light glanced from the windows under the eaves of the old house, making very beautiful the brightness across the road in front of the door.

"You'll find it desperate lonesome," the charioteer said, who had been sent to the depot to meet Mrs. Carlisle's granddaughter, "but she's expecting you'll come—lonesome or lively."

"Lonesome!" cried Louise, gleefully, as she sprang out upon the snowy ground. "Why, I think it is splendid!"

And she entered the cheery kitchen, all aglow with a roaring fire of pine logs on the hearth.

Grandma Carlisle had evidently "expected" her, and as evidently bestirred herself for the occasion, for the table was spread with hot shortcake, baked apples fairly smothered in rich, yellow cream, quivering quince-jelly and home-made cottage cheese; while the old lady herself, in fresh cap and ribbons, came forward on her crutches to welcome her granddaughter.

"Why, my dear," she cried, taking a long survey, "you are as pretty as a picture!"

"Yes?" Louise said, blushing and laughing. "Oh, grandma, what a glorious fire you have got, and what a darling, old-fashioned tea-urn! Oh, how good everything does smell! I haven't had such an appetite in an age."

And before Louise Raymond slept that night, she had taken Grandma Carlisle's heart by storm.

She had been an inmate of the farm-house for a few days when a storm came on, which made the old lady's rheumatism grow so much worse that she was obliged to keep her room; but Louise went about as light-hearted as ever, doing the whole work of the house, with such assistance as John, the hired man, was able to render her.

The rain had fallen all day, steadily, blown hither and thither by the wind, that howled lugubriously through the gorges of the hills, and at last as twilight was settling down over the stormy earth, and Louise was sitting thoughtfully and restfully before the fire, John came in with the message:

"Miss Louise," said he, "there's two gentlemen, rain-bound outside; 'pears they've missed their way, and their horses is clean tuckered out, and it's full ten mile 'round, bein' as the Chestnut bridge is washed away on the main-road, and they want to know if we can't give 'em a night's shelter. I told 'em Mis' Carlisle was sick, and I wa'nt boss, but I would ask the young woman what does the work."

Louise involuntarily winced a little, and then laughed at John's unpolished language.

"Of course they may come in," she said. "I would not turn a dog away from the door such a night as this."

But imagine her amazement, when, turning to welcome the strange gentlemen, she beheld in them no strangers at all, but Mr. Philip Marion and Mr. Max Hubert, literally drenched with rain, their noses reddened with the cold wind. They stood blankly regarding her, and Louise, fully mistress of the situation, went forward with the grace of a young duchess.

"Good-evening, gentlemen! Pray come a little nearer the fire. I hardly supposed that in the storm-bound strangers who sought shelter here I was to welcome old acquaintances. I am glad, however, to be of service to you. John, will you see that the gentlemen's overcoats are attended to at once? They are indeed drenched."

"Oh, Miss Raymond! exceedingly glad to see you, I am sure," stammered Mr. Marion, as he awkwardly permitted his frog like hand to touch hers; "but, if I may inquire, what may you possibly be doing in such a place as this?"

"Didn't John tell you?" she asked, with demure innocence; "I am doing the house-work here."

"Miss Raymond!"

"Well, why not?"

But Mr. Marion had no reply ready, he only rubbed his hands, and smiled feebly, as he advanced toward the grateful red blaze, while Max Hubert was in turn exchanging his greeting.

"It is a surprise, Miss Raymond, to see you here," he said frankly, "and a very agreeable one."

And way down in her heart, Louise wondered what new kind of gallantry had taken away all Max Hubert's awkwardness.

"It's as good as a play," she said, gleefully, when Mr. Hubert had explained that unexpected meeting business had taken them across the country, thus bringing about such an entirely unexpected meeting. She had gone into the kitchen to get cream for the table, and as she stood there skimming off the golden accumulation, she heard Marion's voice.

"Of course old Raymond has failed, and they have lost everything, else she wouldn't be here. What a pity! for with that face of hers she might have married well."

"And what is to prevent her from marrying well now?" Max Hubert answered slowly and deliberately.

"My dear fellow, we must all look out for the main chance. In fact, I was once a little gone myself, but of course that's out of the question now."

And Louise, as she stood there with burning cheeks, was glad, somehow, that Mr. Hubert made no reply.

When she came back to preside at the tea-table, with John democratically seated at the lower end, she was as composed as ever.

For two days the rain-storm continued with unabated violence, during which time Mr. Philip Marion yawned over the week's-old newspaper, and systematically ignored Miss Raymond's presence.

"For a fellow must not get himself entangled," he reflected mentally.

But Max Hubert reasoned quite otherwise. He haunted Louise's footsteps with loverlike persistency, and somehow, although Louise declared "he was a nuisance," she rather seemed to like it.

On the third day the weather cleared, and John brought around the guests' horses.

"Come, Hubert," Marion said, impatiently, "are you going to stand there all day making your adieux?"

"You can be off as quick as you like," Hubert returned, calmly. "I am not going."

"Not going? But business—"

"What do I care for business?" was the unaccountable reply. "Miss Raymond has promised to be my wife, and my business is here, just at present."

And Mr Marion rode away, ejaculating under his breath:

"Did I ever see such a fool in all my life?"

And then Louise told her lover the truth, and the whole truth.

"But I didn't want to marry an heiress," Hubert said, biting his lips almost vexedly.

"Perhaps; but you want me, Max, don't you?" Louise said, with the prettiest coaxing little way in the world.

"Well, I guess I do," he said; "but, my darling, I have had a bright dream of love in a cottage."

"And it shall all come true," Louise said, lightly, "in spite of the detriment in the shape of the fifty thousand dollars you'll have to take with me."

A little later, the two lovers traveled back, tete-a-tete, to New York—just as soon as John's wife could be induced to come and take Louise's place in Grandma Carlisle's household—and what Mr. Philip Marion's feelings were when he learned the true state of the case, we leave the reader to conjecture!

About 10 o'clock Tuesday evening, says the Providence Journal, three persons stood together under a gas light on High street. A few doors adjacent was a saloon, and through the half-opened door came snatches of coarse laughter and licentious song, interjected with occasional oaths. Of the three figures standing near at hand, one was a man apparently of middle age, well formed, and bearing upon his bleared and rum-suffused countenance memories of better days. The other two were females, apparently his wife and daughter. The face of the elder woman was pale and anxious, while that of the younger was pitiful and sad. Only fragments of their conversation could be heard, but it was clearly evident that the wife was eagerly imploring the partially imbruted husband to go home with them, but he refused, and tried in a maudlin way to induce them to leave him.

Just then there came merrily trooping around a corner close at hand a group of young people of both sexes, who were evidently returning from some festival or entertainment. As the party came out into High street they commenced singing, crossing the street. Their voices, well blended, poured forth a flood of harmony upon the still night air, and, as the group of singers gradually disappeared in the distance, snatches of melody came floating back upon the ears of the listeners, including the group of three before referred to. They also ceased talking and listened. The stolid, rum-blotched features of the man worked convulsively as the sweet cadences wafted back to his ear from the increasing distance, growing fainter, then merging in echoes, and finally ceasing altogether.

What was he thinking of? What hidden chord of memory had been thus evoked within him—even through the blinding daze of drink, which held mind and body fast within its clutch? Were they memories of the old-time, purer, better days when he sat with mother, wife and child at his own and their fireside, a sober, trusted, self-reliant man? God knoweth! He and the man himself; but as the fragments of melody rolled back upon his awakening senses, they awoke other echoes within his soul, echoes of the past, as he beheld himself now in contrast with what he had been. And without a word of further parleying he allowed the two waiting ones to slip their arms within his own, and, quiet as a lamb, he went with his own flesh to their home, and the three disappeared into the shadowy night, he walking uncertainly, but uttering no word. What had moved him thus? What was it that had thus touched his heart as with a magician's wand, causing the unseen tears to surge up within his soul, as they had not before, perhaps, for years? It was not much; but it was enough; for the merry group was singing "Home, Sweet Home."

The new postal note, authorized by Congress, it is thought, may be ready to issue by July 1. The proposed note is about as large as a greenback. At the right hand are two columns giving the months of the year, and the dates of twelve years, beginning with the present. At the left hand are three columns of figures. One, representing dollars, is numbered to 4; the second, representing cents, is also numbered up to 9; and each series ends with a cipher. The note is of sums less than five dollars. The postmaster at the office issuing the note will punch the month and year, the number of dollars, number of dimes, and number of cents in their respective columns, thus preventing any alteration of the amount of date. By this system the postal notes can be issued for any sum from 1 cent up to $4.90. The note will be bought like a postage stamp and will be payable to the bearer at any time within three months from the last day of the month of issue. Every postmaster in the United States will be obliged to issue these notes to all who may wish to purchase them.

The Essex Universalist Sunday School Union met with the First Universalist Church in Salem, last Wednesday afternoon. Amos Merrill of Peabody presided, and the exercises were of great interest to Sunday School workers. In the afternoon an institute was conducted by Rev. L. J. Fletcher, D. D., of Franklin, with brief addresses by Rev. Drs. Bolles and Emerson of Salem, Geo. Randall of Peabody, and others. In the evening the important theme "How to cultivate piety in the young" was ably discussed by Rev. C. E. Nash of Newtonville, Rev. Mr. Snow of Haverhill, and others. Mr. Merrill was re-elected President and Wallace W. Wright of Lynn, Secretary.

The Conference which has just closed in Boston, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, embraces the portion of Massachusetts east of the Green Mountains, north of a line drawn from the north-east corner of Rhode Island to the mouth of the Neponset River. This body to-day consists of 238 ministers and 17 candidates for admission. These represent a membership, including probationers, of 30,983. There are 212 church edifices in the New England conference boundaries, and 100 parsonages, and a property valued at $2,000,000, in addition to the Wilbraham Academy and the Boston University. In connection with these churches there are 4393 officers and leaders engaged in Sunday School work, and instruction is weekly given to 33,936 Scholars.

A correspondent complains of the inattention of a driver of the Street Railway, but as his name is not attached, we must decline to publish it, but will make the following suggestions: When any person wishes to board a car, either at night or in broad day-light, they should indicate their intention in some manner, either by word of month or hand signal to the driver or conductor so that the car may be stopped and an opportunity offered of getting on without the risk of a broken arm or leg. Many persons imagine that when they want to get on a car the driver or conductor divines their intention by some sort of second sight and will stop the car without receiving any sort of a signal. But drivers and conductors are just like other men and it is not to be expected that they will stop their car for a person who has not manifested the least sign that he wishes to get on board, even though he may in fact desire to do so. And if these people who are constantly complaining that the employes of the street railroad are neglecting their duty, will take heed to the suggestions mentioned, we think they will find no officials more obliging and courteous than the drivers and conductors of the street railroad company.

Both the Republican and Democratic papers of Woburn are claiming that a great victory has been achieved at their last town election—inasmuch as a non partisan ticket was successful at the polls. This is an unusual thing for Woburn, which generally votes even in town affairs the democratic ticket straight. They claim also that the election is a victory for the city charter; yet they have elected as one of the Selectmen the very man by whose influence, according to those journals, the city charter was defeated, and who as the Woburn Advertiser said misrepresented the town in the "Legislature." Woburn people must be easily satisfied.

The wash stand mania has struck the women of New England. If you call to see a lady friend and are told that she is engaged, the chances are that she is in the garret, in company with an old wash stand and a pot of black paint. She has taken off the pieces at the back and the sides, from the top, and nailed a board over the orifice where the bowl was accustomed to be placed, and is now painting the whole thing black, with perhaps, some stripes of gilt. When it is dry, she will cover the top and bottom shelf with red plush, finished with fringe around the sides, and the old wash stand thus metamorphosed, will be brought down to the parlor, where it will serve as a table, or a music rack, and a very pretty article of furniture it will be.

Wood grown, several improved shades of terra cotta and crushed strawberry, Presbyterian blue, intense, pale and leaden-looking greens, and porphyry shot with gold, are the leading shades in spring and summer costumes. For young ladies are new exquisite shades of pink and mauve. White holds its own still, for beautiful as some of the new tints undoubtedly are, nothing in all the range of colors can be made to look more attractive and artistic than white, with lace adornings.

The stores to be vacated by Daniel T. Smith and Charles Lamson, on the corner of Washington and Essex streets, Salem, are to be occupied by the Merchants National Bank. Mr. Smith and his father have been at the same stand fifty-one years, Mr. Smith's father having been in business there forty years, and he himself, eleven.

It was a New York woman who decorated her room with bric-a-brac and pictures, and placed her husband's photograph on the topmost nail. Then she sat down to admire her work, and blissfully remarked, "Now everything is lovely and the goose hangs high.

If I were gov'nor of this cultured State,
Says I to myself, says I.
On classical ice I would carefully skate,
Says I to myself, says I.
I'd let Roman history severely alone,
I wouldn't go fooling around Cæsar's throne
To quote any Christians before they were known,
Says I to myself, says I.

TO OWNERS OR KEEPERS OF DOGS.

Extracts from Chapter 102 of Public Statutes:

SECT. 80. Every owner or keeper of a dog of three months old or over shall annually, on or before the thirtieth day of April, cause it to be registered, numbered, described, and licensed for one year from the first day of the ensuing May, in the office of the clerk of the city or town wherein said dog is kept, and shall cause it to wear around its neck a collar distinctly marked with its owner's name and its registered number.

SECT. 81. An owner of a dog may at any time have it licensed until the first day of the ensuing May; and a person becoming the owner or keeper of a dog after the first day of May, not duly licensed, shall cause it to be numbered, described and licensed as provided in the preceding section.

SECT. 82. The fee for every license shall be two dollars for a male dog, and five dollars for a female dog.

SECT. 87. Whoever keeps a dog contrary to the provisions of this chapter shall forfeit fifteen dollars, five dollars of which shall be paid to the complainant, and ten dollars to the treasurer of the county in which the dog is kept.

SECT. 99. The mayor of each city and the chairman of the selectmen of each town shall annually, within ten days from the first day of July, issue a warrant to one or more police officers or constables, directing them to proceed forthwith to kill or cause to be killed all dogs within such city or town not licensed and collared according to the provisions of this chapter, and to enter complaint against the owners or keepers thereof; and any person may, and every police officer and constable shall, kill or cause to be killed all such dogs whenever or wherever found.

Book Notices.

ANCIENT CLASSICS FOR ENGLISH READERS.—This is the title of a unique and really delightful series of books, the first volume of which, "The Commentaries of Cæsar," by Anthony Trollope, is just issued. The aim of the series is to open to the unlearned English reader the beauties and treasures of classic lore, tell who the writers were, give some connected outline of the story they narrate, present some of their most striking passages in choice English translation, and illustrate them with the wealth of modern scholarship There are 27 volumes in all, and heretofore they have cost $1.00 each. They are published in The Elzevir Library, in really charming style, at 15 cents each for paper binding, or 30 cents for cloth binding. "Herodotus," by George C. Swayne; "Cicero," by W. L. Collins, and "Demosthenes," by W. J. Brodribb, are announced for immediate issue, and the other volumes are to follow, one or more each week, until the series is complete. From even these marvelously low prices large discounts are offered to clubs and for prompt orders. John B. Alden, Publisher, 18 Vesey St., New York.

The May issue of Demorest's Monthly Magazine is one of the most attractive numbers we have yet had of this publication. "The Admiral's Ward" is concluded, and a new story, "Out of the World" begins very pleasantly. Among the many praiseworthy artic es may be mentioned; "Art in its Infancy," "The Farm of Flowers," and "An English Glove Factory." Jennie June gives another of her articles, "How we Live in New York," and Mrs. Hungerford furnishes some useful information about "Weddings." "Home Art and Home Comfort," "Current Topics," and the various departments are all good. The illustrations are varied and excellent, and include a fine oil picture called "The Trio." There is no magazine better adapted to the household than Demorest's, and its moderate price makes it available to all.

BOWDITCH'S FLORAL CATALOGUE is a beautifully illustrated book of 128 pages, fully describing all Seeds and Plants, and the space devoted to the vegetable seed is crowded full of instructive reading matter giving the complete methods of cultivation, together with descriptions of all the new varieties of recent introduction. Mr. Bowditch who issues this elaborate Catalogue also publishes The Florist and Farmer, an illustrated Monthly Magazine. If you would like to see a copy of either, address W. E. Bowditch, 645 Warren Street, Boston, Mass.

A stand fell down with a crash,
A number of men it did mash,
But the entire ten
Were soon well again—
St. Jacobs Oil cured every gash.

A baker who lives in Duluth,
Went crazy one night with a tooth,
He rubbed the gum boil
With St Jacobs Oil,
It cured him, and this is the truth.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE SCHOLARSHIPS.— Congressmen Stone, Russell and Lovering have each the opportunity to appoint a representative of his District to a free scholarship in the Massachusetts Agricultural College, under the conditions we published in our last. A premium of $100 is offered by the Essex Agricultural Society to the best prepared student who shall enter the College at the commencement of the next year. Examinations for admission will be held at Amherst on Tuesday, June 19, at 9 A. M. Competitors for the $100 offered by the Essex Society should make previous application to the Secretary, Hon. Chas. P. Preston, Danvers.

There are some persons who can't take a joke. Fogg is not one of them. One of the boys, acquainted with Fogg's frequent changes of abode, asked him which he thought was the cheaper, to move or to pay rent. "I can't tell you, my dear boy," replied Fogg, "I have always moved."—Ex.

A Miss Buchanan, once rallying a brave soldier on his courage said: "Now, Captain Johnson, do you really mean to tell me you can walk up to the cannon's mouth without fear?" "Yes," was the prompt reply, "or a Buchanan's either," and he did it. It may be safely assumed that the lady, to whom the gallant Captain thus paid his respects, hadn't the catarrh. This malady is as loathsome as it is painful. It's cure has heretofore been considered impossible. Ely's Cream Balm, however, never fails to cure it. Mr. Nathan Fegley, with E. F. Montz, Merchant, Wilkesbarre, Pa., says: "I've had catarrh for 15 years. Ely's Cream Balm has opened my nostrils and reduced the inflammation. My eyes, too, can stand strong light." This balm is a marvel of fragrance, and cu rative powers—is not a liquid or snuff, and is easily applied.

THE EDITOR'S DREAM.—The editor fell asleep after a time, and lo! he dreamed a dream. And it seemed to him that having armed himself with certain papers and books, he turned his steps once more to heaven and knocked at the gate.

'Hello! is that you again! What do you wish?' said Peter.

'Let these persons again come forth,' replied the editor; and Peter made them all pass through the gate and stand outside.

They came as before, and uttered the same cries as before.

'Why didn't you notice the big egg I sent you?' yelled the first.

'It was rotten,' replied the editor.

'Why didn't you write up my soda fountain?' said the druggist.

'You had your ticket printed at another office,' calmly replied the local man.

'Why did you write about old Tomlinson's hens, and never speak of my new gate?' shouted a third.

'Old Tomlinson paid for his advertising and you didn't. Here's the bill,' said the editor.

'Why did you spell my name wrong in the programme!' groaned the local talent.

'Take a look at your manuscript and see for yourself,' replied the editor with a grim smile.

The rest of the company yelled out their complaints in unison, and the editor calmly sorted out a pile of bills for unpaid subscriptions and presented each with one; and it was so when they received them they all tore their hair and rushed violently down a steep place to the sea; and St. Peter, calmly taking the editor by the hand, led him within the gate, and said:

'Come, friend; these chaps managed to slip through here in spite of us, but thanks to the press, we know now what sort of fellows they are. Come in and stay, we need a few such men as you in here.'—Schaulerville Standard.

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

A party in town who answered an advertisement of the Rutledge Publishing company, Easton, Pa., wishes us to say that they do not do as they agree to in their announcements. There is evidently a "catch" in their advertisements to trap the unwary.—Milford Gazette.

Months ago we cautioned our readers about sending money to this concern. The "catch" in the advertisement is this: the prize they offer is $20.00 in every case. They probably receive three or four thousand answers to their query, and each applicant sends 10 cents. The problem is not difficult—therefore the number of replies is large. If more than one finds the answer, which is usually the case, they are told that the prize of $20.00 is to be divided among the fortunate ones. So that if the applicant solves the problem, he makes but a dollar or so, while the Rutledge Publishing Co. pockets undr eds of dollars by each operation. They expect publishers to insert the advertisement in return for a valuable(?) work, costing in the neighborhood of five cents. It is a humbug, all round

Mrs. Harrison Thayer, who lives on Jersey Hill, in the town of Danby, began sneezing last Tuesday. After eight hours' continual sneezing the family became alarmed and called Dr. Smith, who could not account for the strange attack and could only ease the lady by administering chloroform. But this only affected a temporary cure, for no sooner does Mrs. Thayer become conscious than she begins sneezing again. On Monday she was still at it. Drs. Beers and Smith both say they never knew such a case before. The lady is becoming weak.

FREE OF COST.

All persons wishing to test the merits of a great remedy—one that will positively cure Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, or any affliction of the Throat and Lungs—are requested to call at Hazen A. JOHN P. FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers

We were privileged this week to look over the new shop of John A. Lord, Jr., which is now one of the finest in the town. Work was begun soon after the fire, which will be remembered by our readers, and the result is a shop with all the modern conveniences. An additional story and a half was built on the ruins of the old shop on the south, which is 55x20. In the rear of this is a new building entire, running at right angles and connected with the first one. This is 30 feet wide and 64 feet in length. Still further in the rear is the main tannery, 40x123, where are also the lime and water pits, and connected also with this is a building 76x30, where is the engine. There are 120 vats in the main tannery, 72 in the old yard and about fifty double vats in the beam house. Very little extract is used and in the new tannery the old laying away process is dispensed with, the leather being hung perpendicularly in the vats. It is claimed that considerable time is saved by this method over the old process of laying away and the result thus far has been highly satisfactory to Mr. Lord. There are nine large leaches, a hide mill put in by Friend & Annable, and a bark conveyor, which conveys the bark from the mill directly to the leaches, saving cartage. It is a great convenience and the direct saving of much labor. It also carries tan back to the fire room. We are now shown into the engine room, where is an engine of 85 horse power, with a wheel ten feet in diameter, having a twenty four inch face, furnished with a Seibert side feed oiler. Notwithstanding the power of this engine, it is nearly noiseless in its motion, and is thought to be the best engine in town. It was built by our enterprising machinists, John E. Clement & Co., and Mr. Clement is proud of it as he has good reason to be. There are three bark mills and a cutter. The second story of this rear building is utilized as a stuffing loft, and it is the largest in town. Eight thousand sides can be hung in this loft at one time. To our readers in this leather town, who are so familiar with the process to which hides and leather is subjected, no description is necessary. Suffice it to say that many labor saving appliances are now used in all our largest manufactories, and this shop seems to be furnished with the best of them. There is a boarding machine, which will do at least five men's work, made by Owen Googan, Pittsfield, Mass. It seems to do the work just as satisfactorily, as the old and slow process of boarding by hand. There are also as we get along, two scouring machines side by side, a Fitz Henry scourer, and a new one made by Riley of Salem. This latter will do the work of six men, and as they do their work one cannot help wondering at the great improvements and facilities for expediting the processes of finishing leather. Up stairs in the main shop, the new building, is the finishing room and lofts for drying. There is a Freeman Glassing Machine, which works on a cylinder slide, made by J. T. Freeman & Co., of Woburn, Mass., which will put through from nine hundred to one thousand sides per day. There are three splitting machines in constant operation down stairs, and a stuffing wheel which carries 300 lbs. easily. There is a large steam elevator for the transportation of all their merchandise from one story to another, and over the blacking, glassing and whitening room is another loft for drying, with a capacity for 3000 sides. Up stairs in the first building as we enter is the room for shipping and doing up all the leather as it is finished. Here is a Frazier telephone connecting this shop with the lower shop of Mr. Lord, on the corner of Wallis and Walnut streets, for it is to be remembered that Mr. Lord does a large and extensive currying business in this lower shop. Here is the main office, where the books are kept, where the pay roll for all the men in the entire establishment is made up, and is under the charge of Horace G. Wheeler. Mr. Lord has an office in Boston with N. W. Rice & Co., the veteran hide dealers of that city, and the leather manufactured by Mr. Lord is sold in all directions, partly in Boston through Mr. Lord's office, and partly from his shop in Peabody direct. Mr. Lord gives employment to one hundred and fifty men. The tannery is under the management of John Keefe, and Arthur D. Osgood is foreman of the currying department. Mr. Osgood learned his trade in Woburn, at the establishment of John Cummings of that town. He has resided in town several years, formerly doing business for himself, but on the completion of Mr. Lord's new shop, was selected by him to have the entire charge of the business. The leather manufactured by Mr. Lord is of superior quality, Brogan being a specialty. One of Winter's improved measuring machines occupies a prominent place in the shipping room. The capacity of the shop at present is 450 sides per day. The work of building this immense establishment was entrusted to Mayhew S. Clark, and the mill work and machinery was put in by Isaac Dennison, and the painting by B. F. Woodbury. The father of Mr. Lord is well known to our readers, as having been one of our most successful curriers. Some six years ago Mr. Lord, senior, retired from active business and it has since been carried on by his son, who learned his trade, and until his father's retirement, carried on the business with him. The establishment is an honor to the town, and to the interest which forms so large a part of the industry of this town.

The Woburn correspondent of the Boston Globe has the following complimentary allusion to Rev. V. M. Simons: Rev. Volney M. Simons, who for the past three years has filled the pulpit at the Methodist Episcopal Church, has by the rotation of pastorates been assigned to the Florence street Methodist Church at Springfield. During the three years Mr. Simons has been here he has gained the respect and esteem of many outside his church, and among his own people he was very much beloved, the people of the church making a special request a year ago that he might be allowed to remain with them the extreme limit allowed by the conference to any pastor.

We call attention this week to the advertisement of John H. Pray, Sons & Co., of Boston, the old and established carpet firm of Boston. Since they have moved into their new store, their facilities for supplying the trade have been enormous. All the finest makes, all the best and desirable styles of the leading manufacturers are to be found here, and our readers who have visited the store know the large assortment from which they can select.

Whereas, King Upton, of Salem, in said county, named as an executor in the last will and testament of said deceased, heretofore proved, has presented to said Court his petition praying that letters testamentary may be issued to him jointly with Marian C. Upton, and Henry Wardwell, the other executors therein named, and that he may be exempt from giving a surety or sureties on his bond, for the reasons alleged in said petition.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Salem, in said county of Essex, on the first Monday of May, next, at nine o'clock, before noon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.

And said King Upton is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper, called the Peabody Press, printed at Peabody, the last publication to be two days at least before said Court.

Witness, George F. Choate, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this sixteenth day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three. J. T. Mahoney, Register.

MORTGAGEE'S SALE.

By virtue of a power of sale contained in a certain mortgage deed, given by Edward W. Jacobs, of Peabody, in the County of Essex and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and Eliza W. Jacobs, his wife, in her own right, to James Marsh of Peabody, dated the twenty-eighth day of September, in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight, and recorded with Essex Deeds, South District, Book 1017, Leaf 40; and for breach of condition of said mortgage will be sold at public auction on the premises hereinafter described on THURSDAY the tenth day of May, 1883, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular, the premises described in said mortgage, namely: A certain parcel of pasture and tillage land situated in said Peabody, bounded thus, viz.: Easterly by land of Jonathan King and Eben King. Northerly by land of said Edward W. Jacobs and Westerly by land of said Edward W. Jacobs, and Southerly by Forest Street, containing twenty-four acres, be the same more or less, being marked and defined as the wall now stands, being the premises that said James Marsh conveyed to said Eliza W. Jacobs by his deed dated March 28th, A. D. 1874.
JAMES MARSH, Mortgagee.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The PRESS is called upon to recount a most sad affair, over which we would gladly draw the veil of obscurity. The matter has been known by us for quite a while, but we have hesitated about publishing until all the details were assured, which, even yet, is not done. But as the unfortunate matter has already been given with varying details, to the public, we briefly rehearse it. Mr. Edward C. Spofford, a well known citizen of this town, who has been for some time back in the employ of the Monson Slate Company in Boston, left unexpectedly on the 29th of last month and has not been seen since. The first of the month an examination of his accounts revealed to the firm that a sum of money, which it was supposed had been duly deposited by Mr. Spofford, had not been placed in the Bank. The deficiency was made good by friends of Spofford. The saddest part of the story is his connection with Post 50, G. A. R., of which he has been quartermaster, to which office he was re-elected last January. The Post has thus far, not authorized any statements in regard to its affairs, but it is well known that the charity fund of the Post, amounting to about $1500 was under his control. The Post held an unusually full meeting on Monday evening, at which it is understood the subject was discussed. The Post members decline to give any information, but we gather from what we do hear, that it was decided to keep matters quiet for a short time to await further developments. Mr. Spofford went to Denver, Colorado, where he has relatives, from which place he has sent word that he should come back, and that matters would be righted. His bondsmen are Col. C. T. Batchelder and Capt. W. F. Wiley. Spofford was a member of the Department Commander's Staff, of several masonic and other organizations. There are not wanting those who still have confidence in Mr. Spofford's reappearance. He has undoubtedly had the Post's funds on deposit in Boston, and it is not impossible that their present place of deposit may be revealed and make what has now an ugly look, appear favorable for him. As we have already stated, the whole matter thus far has been made up of rumors, so there is much that an exact statement of affairs would modify. From certain information which has been given us, it is probable that the next week will develop important bearings on the case, which we shall give in a later issue, and we believe it will be favorable to Mr. Spofford.

A sad affliction has visited the family of Charles H. Arrington, in the decease of their eldest daughter, who died very suddenly last week, in Beverly, where they recently removed from this town. She was a member of the Universalist Sabbath School here, and greatly beloved by her friends, who were numerous in this vicinity. She was out riding the Sabbath previous to her death; on her return she complained of illness and grew rapidly worse until Wednesday night when the attending physicians pronounced her recovery impossible. She died Thursday morning. Mrs. Arrington has been ill for many months and upon this daughter had come the care of the family, which obligation she assumed with cheerfulness, and which was doubtless the indirect cause of her death. Her funeral was attended Sunday by members of her class here in the Universalist school, who carried with them a beautiful floral offering. Rev. Mr. Sprague officiated, assisted by Rev. Mr. Preble, the Universalist pastor in Beverly.

A masquerade party was given in Ashland hall last Thursday evening, under the auspices of the Spiritualist Society. A large number were present. The music was furnished by Getchell & Upton's Band. Among those present in costume, were the following: Mrs. John W. Lee, Old Lady; Mrs. Emily Dodge, Queen of Hearts; Mrs. L. B. Whipple, Topsy; Mrs. E. I. Kimball, Spectre; Miss Annie Tibbetts, School Girl; Mrs. C. H. Putnam, Euchre; Mrs. F. B. Price, Fancy Costume; Mr. B. A. Wyatt, Indian; Eugene McNeil, Fancy Costume; Herbert I. Foan, Monk; H. M. Holt, Butcher; N. H. Chase, Fool's suit; Louis Foan, Clown; Mrs. G. W. Lovett, Beverly, Morning; Miss Lizzie Lovett, Beverly, Fire Fly; Miss A. F. Wallis, Beverly, Thunder shower; Mrs. Helen Bailey, Mountain Girl; Mrs. F. E. Brown, Gypsy Girl; Mr. E. I. Kimball, King David; William Flanagan, Dinah; Mrs. T. Walton, Fancy Costume; Miss Lizzie Berry, Fancy Costume; Miss Annie Allen, Fancy Costume; Mrs. Abbie Price, Market Woman.

The Fall River line resumed its Sunday night trips to New York last Sunday. The connecting train leaves the Old Colony station at seven o'clock P. M.

Semper Idem—means what it says. Inquire for it at Geo. Stevens'.

The new two-cent stamp for letter postage after October 1, is to be exactly like the present three-cent stamp, except that over the vignette the words "United States postage," while the words "two cents" below will be in plain letters upon a straight line. In order to distinguish it completely from the present three-cent stamp it will be of some other color than green. This new stamp is devised to take the place of the present two-cent one in order that the stamp in most common use may have Washington's head upon it, as has always been the case. After October 1st. no more of the present twos and threes will be printed.

The complimentary benefit to Horace G. Wheeler last evening by members of the Unity Club, was a success, and a neat little sum will be netted to the beneficiary. Geo. M. Baker's drama "Down by the Sea," and "Doing for the Best" was presented; in the latter of which, Mr. Wheeler appeared to fine advantage, and gave evidence of careful study and training. During the evening the beneficiary was the recipient of a handsome basket of flowers, from the greenhouse of Mr. Ward, contributed by his friends. Mrs. Ferguson was also presented with some handsome floral offerings.

The Baptist church is to be congratulated upon what appears to be a termination of a tedious season of "candidating" which is always a severe trial to the vitality of any church, and all friends of religious work will hope with the society for a long continuance of happy relations with a new pastor. Last Monday evening it was unanimously voted to extend a call to Rev. W. P. Chipman, of Davisville, R. I., who had already signified his intention to accept should the call be made. Misses Craig and French and Mr. A. F. Rowell were appointed a committee on finances.

It is a subject of wide reaching and vital importance, the use of tobacco by pupils in our public schools. The belief is universal that the use of tobacco by children has a tendency to create in them an appetite for stimulating and alcoholic drinks. It is of daily occurence to see boys from eight to fifteen years of age with either a stub of a cigar or a piece of tobacco in their mouth. That it should be the duty of every teacher and parent to inform themselves on the subject, and take some united action for the stopping of this growing evil cannot be denied.

Miss Grace F. Dalton assisted at Mr. S. W. Stevens' classical chamber-concert in Lowell last week, and the Vox Populi speaks of her as "a soprano from Salem, who by her personal graces and well-trained voice greatly enhanced the success of the recital. She has not only a sweet and expressive voice, but it possesses that liquid quality so easily detected by and grateful to the cultivated ear. All her numbers were cordially applauded. We shall hope to hear her in song many times hereafter, in our city."

The first installment of the five-cent nickle piece of the latest design was received by Treasurer Wymah from the Philadelphia mint. It amounted to only $500; more are expected soon and they will be put into circulation when received. This issue of the nickle piece has the word "cents" inscribed under the Roman "V," and is intended as a substitute for the new nickle piece which bore no inscription to designate its value beyond the figure "V." There are already about 5,000,000 pieces of this coin in circulation.

The Marblehead correspondent of the Lynn Bee has the following: Mr. A. J. Hubbard, of Peabody, has a valuable picture of Capt. James Mugford of this town, that has been handed down through the family. It is the only picture that is known, that was taken from life. Mr. Hubbard was in town Monday, and had the picture with him. He has been offered a large sum of money for the picture, but will not part with it.

The laying of the new foundation for the old Lexington monument has been superintended daily by a large and intelligent standing committee of citizens, and their careful inspection of the adjustment of each stone, their cheerful and helpful advice and unflagging interest in the work are a sure guarantee of the solidity and enduring quality of the masonry. Vacancies on the committee have been promptly filled as fast as they occurred, and the morale is kept up to the highest standard.

Mr. J. Arthur Trask of this town was united in marriage last Thursday evening to Miss Georgie W. Jacques of Salem, Rev. Mr. Kiese of the Calvary Baptist Church officiating. The newly wedded couple will reside on Elm street, Peabody. The PRESS extends its best wishes.

A lively runaway occurred last Friday noon. A horse belonging to Amos King became frightened on Lowell street. The owner seeing his danger jumped from the carriage. The horse ran to the depot and fell on the steps, where he was captured. The team was badly damaged.

Services will be held at the Universalist Church next Sunday in the forenoon. The changes in the audience room are all completed and it will be occupied then instead of the vestry. We have already given a description of the room which is particularly fine and artistic. The society has raised money enough not only to wipe out all debt, but to pay for all the late changes.

Mr. Horace F. Buxton was united in marriage to Miss Alice Pike, daughter of Mr. James Pike, last Friday evening. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Sperry, at the residence of the bride's father, on Sylvan street. He gave a reception at his house, 28 Main street, to the Torrent Hose 3, of which he was a member. He was presented with a large picture by the company.

An out of town subscriber in renewing his subscription says "Fail not to send the PRESS whether I am on time with my subscription or not. Its visit is like an old friend, and every line, advertisements and all, are scanned every Friday morning. Distance lends enchantment to the town, that none can appreciate unless living at a distance. May the editors and their paper prosper."

Mr. Geo. R. Nelson, son of Mr. R. G. Nelson and Miss Annie, daughter of Benj. F. Upton, were united in marriage, by Rev. W. G. Sperry, at the residence of the bride's father on Franklin street, last Wednesday evening. Mr. Nelson and his fair bride have our best wishes for their future success. After the ceremony they left for a trip to New York City.

The Salem Light Infantry (Co. L. Eighth Regiment), Capt. Copeland, passed a very creditable inspection on Thursday evening. Col. Ayers was unable to attend, and the inspection was conducted by Lieut. Col. Osgood, assisted by Major Tyler and Sprague and Quartermaster Perkins. A supper followed.

The bondsmen for the liquor dealers who are granted licenses by the town, must make an affidavit that they are worth not less than $2000 clear of all incumbrances, and they are also required to specify enough property to cover the bond of $1000, which is required of them. This is required by the Legislature, by a law passed last year.

The following appointments were made by the selectmen Saturday; Measurers of upper leather—Oliver Emerson, Jas. S. Paul, Joshua Giddings, Augustus H. Sanger, Jr., William A. Saunders; weigher of hay and coal, William Frye; sealer of weights and measures, George R. Norton; inspector of milk, Thomas W. Peasley.

"Charlie," Heylingberg's artist barber, was away a few days last week, and returned with the following cognomens: "Tonsorial artist, physiognomical hair dresser, facial operator, cranium manipulator, and capillary abridger." He also shaves and hair cuts with ambidextrous facility.

At the opening of the school in Wallis district, Monday morning, Mr. Barnes was unable to be present, and his place was temporarily filled by Rev. Mr. Sperry, until Miss Emerson, of Sa could be summoned, who will supply the place until Mr. Barnes recovers from his illness.

The Union Patent Medicine Co., of Salem, are ever on the alert for the interests of the patrons. They believe in square dealing and the very lowest prices consistent with a living profit, and their trade is largely increasing. Read their new advertisement.

The hot sun on Monday and Tuesday gave a vernal tinge to southern greensward slopes and brought summer vividly to mind. A few days like these would clothe the meadows and lawns in living green and make the groves clap their hands for joy.

Mr. Edward Burnham fell from a load of hay which he was driving from Ipswich last Friday, while passing through Central street, and struck on his head. It was feared serious injury had been done him, but he soon recovered, having sustained a few slight bruises.

Rev. Dr. Steele who this week assumes his new charge at Reading will leave town with an enviable reputation, and with the confidence of all who knew him while here. And the church at that place is fortunate in securing so talented a minister.

Speaking of Romeo and Juliet lithographs that are scattered about town, a gentleman said that he knew that there had been actual occurrences of such a scene in town. As the gentleman is a noted truth teller, we regret that his statement may be too true.

Members of the W. C. T. Unions in the surrounding towns and cities are to hold a "neighborhood meeting" with the Peabody Union on Friday next, at 2.30 P. M., in their room over Mr. Whidden's hardware store. All interested are welcome.

Rev. Mr. Hudson and wife have gone on a short vacation to Richmond, Va., Washington and other places in the South. They expect to be absent two weeks.

MONSTER SALE

— AT —

FRANK COUSINS' BEE-HIVE.

Notwithstanding the dull weather the past week, the announcement of the Monster Sale of all our Surplus Stock created a great sensation in Dry Goods circles. Our large store was thronged with eager purchasers early and late. Our trade was so large during Saturday afternoon and evening, that it was found necessary to add extra clerks, and even then the purchasers were so numerous at some departments that customers had to leave, saying they would call again.

New clerks will be hired from day to day, as the rapidly increasing business will demand. Our stock is now well arranged; our bargains are numerous; and our surplus stock will probably be entirely closed out this week.

BREAD!

BREAD!

BREAD!

BREAD!

Why will people annoy themselves by making bread, burn extra coal, be bothered in getting good yeast and flour; when by simply putting up one of all this inconvenience and expense can be saved. Please don't put the card up in the back side of the house, but put it where it can be seen plainly from the street, and you will be surprised to see how quick the drivers will notice it. The cause, some would say, is owing to their thinking some one in that house is in a starving condition, but such is not the fact, not by any means, the cause is this: The people in such houses are used to having first class bread, and as a natural consequence call for BRAGDON'S, so when you see one of his cards up you can put those people down as judges of every time. The probabilities are that if B. F. Butler should eat Bragdon's bread for the next three years, he would have the courage to try to enter the White House, but not having the opportunity of getting it, the chances for him are slim, and if he should send for it, it is a question whether he would get it, as the people of Peabody are of considerable account. HERE AT LAST.

BRAGDON'S CALL-CARDS

GOOD BREAD

After Long and Weary Waiting Relief is Brought to those who Need it.

"Well, Pat," said an Orange county Physician to a complaining Irish patient some years ago, "for that pain in your chest you had better go home and put on a mustard plaster. I can't think this minute of anything better. And by the way," added the doctor turning to a friend, "I wish somebody would invent a real good plaster—something actually helpful for such cases as Pat's. Maybe they will sometime, when its too late for me to use it."

When BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER was placed on the market about ten years ago the doctor's hope became a fact. Because of the rare medicinal virtues inherent in it, its rapid action and sure results, the Capcine is fast displacing the slow-acting plasters of former days, for all affections to which a plaster is ever applicable. Price 25 cents. In the middle of the genuine is cut the word CAPCINE.

PLAY AT MONTE CARLO.

Play at Monte Carlo is indeed a serious business, involving, beyond the anxiety inseparable from games of hazard, great bodily exertion and no small expenditure of temper. In the good old times at the favorite German gaming-places, though the fun might grow fast and furious toward the hour of closing, in the daylight things were quiet and decorous almost to dullness. You lounged out of the blazing sunshine into cool and darkened apartments; and when your blinding eyes became accustomed to the dim religious light, you looked round on a scene of peaceful stagnation. Some of the tables were as yet unoccupied and still shrouded in brown holland; the others were surrounded by little social groups who gave something like a silently friendly welcome to each [illegible] who came with his contribution of cheerfulness. There was every facility for studying the strategy of the campaign, laying down the stakes, and raking up the winnings. At the Monte Carlo Casino it is much the reverse. At high noon, and very possibly before it, all the eight tables—there are six roulette tables in an outer hall, and two for rouge-et-noir in an inner chamber—are doing the very briskest business. There is a hubbub of voices. There is a general sense of scuffle and turmoil. You feel as if you had passed the swing doors of a thriving city bank, and were being crushed up to the counter in a mob of money-getters on a term day. Eager adventurers or gaping lookers-on are pressing round each centre of excitement in serried ranks three or four deep; while the comparative few who have been fortunate enough to find chairs seem half-stifled under the physical pressure from behind. The duties of the croupiers are no sinecure. They are constantly occupied in placing the stakes for those who, finding it impossible to get near the tables, are screeching contradictory instructions, often in unintelligible French. Literally the ladies and gentlemen who are relegated to the back places in this bear-garden earn their money, when they make any, by the sweat of their brows. Nor are the chances against their winning limited by any means to the odds that are avowedly reserved by the establishment; for, when you have won a stake, you have often to wrangle for it, and we need hardly say that a modest foreigner, abroad in everything but his native speech, is exceedingly likely to be pushed to the wall. In the first place, there is the liability to make honest mistakes when coins are being scattered broadcast over the board by many different persons, and sometimes piled upon each other in inextricable confusion, when there is a rush to back a popular number. In the next place, there are professional harpies, who are always on the hover, with the sole idea of preying on the profits of other people; and we need not say that these conscienceless are the loudest and most determined in insisting on their claims. The croupiers are passionately appealed to, and give their decison, which is final. Frequently the decision, though it may be honestly given, is flagrantly unjust. And the victim who has been waiting for the turn of luck that might have materially redressed the balance of his transactions, can only resign himself to the robbery. When M. Blanc was building up his princely fortune at Hombourg his servants had orders to deal more liberally. When the parties to a dispute refused to be reconciled, the bank paid both of them, and went on again. But Hombourg was exposed to a lively competition, while Monte Carlo has a monopoly, which it seems inclined to abuse; though, in its earlier days, it perpetuated the Hombourg traditions, and was generous to the victims of runs on the wrong color.—The Saturday Review.

THE MISSIONARIES IN AFRICA.

These missionaries with little knowledge and narrow intellect commence by instilling into the natives, hour by hour, from the sacred pulpit, whence should only be heard the accents of truth, that they are the equals of the white man, that they are on a level with the civilized, when they ought rather to say to them, in the tones of persuasion and authority, "Between you and the European there is a wide gulf which I have come to teach you to bridge over. Regenerate yourselves; quit your habits of brutish sloth; labor and pray; abandon crime and practice the virtue which I will show you; cast off your ignorance and learn; and then, but not till then, can you stand on the same level as the white; then and then only will you be his equal." To tell the ignorant savage that he is the equal of the civilized man is a falsehood; it is a crime. It is to be wanting in all those duties which were imposed upon the teacher when he set out for Africa. It is to be a traitor to his sacred mission.—How I Crossed Africa—Pinto.

DON'T FOOL WITH RABBITS.

A man by the name of Otis, living on Horse Creek, Cal., was bitten by a rabbit recently, from the effects of which he almost lost his life. He was trying to catch the rabbit for his little boy, when the animal bit him on the thumb. About an hour afterward his thumb began to pain him severely and swelled rapidly, so that he sent for a physician, who thought he must have been bitten by a snake. The doctor, at first, could not believe that it was the bite of the rabbit that caused the trouble; so, to fully satisfy himself, he had several rabbits caught, with which he experimented. He found that the upper jaw contained a hollow tooth, from which he extracted a very poisonous fluid. He ascertained that two drops of this fluid administered to a lamb would kill it in less than an hour.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN BOSS.

How to Promote Personal Power—A New Radical Reformer.

"There is no provision in the Divine economy for political bosses!"

With a bang of his fist, and in the voice of a man who had made up his mind on the subject, Rev. James Chambers, of Calvary Presbyterian Church, Harlem, recently opened his sermon with this announcement. He was right. The only boss authorized by the Book is mentioned in these words: "He who ruleth his own spirit is greater than he who taketh a city."

Commonly, the better side of men is subject to the despotism of the worse side. Bad passions, bad humors, mean jealousies and base revenges are all bosses. One of the worst of bosses is bile. What is more depressing in philosophical or theological thought is due to it. Old General Debility is another tyrannical boss. He lashes men who are naturally bad or miserably weak.

Concerning his deliverance from this bondage, Rev. S. P. Lewis, pastor of the Eighth Street Baptist Church, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "I was suffering from exhaustion and general debility. As an invigorant I used PARKER'S GINGER TONIC. I never met with anything so effective It is an elegant family medicine. I take a bottle in my valise when I go on my annual vacations."

PARKER'S GINGER TONIC neither intoxicates nor promotes a desire for strong drinks. The most pronounced temperance people use and praise it for this reason alone. It cures Malarial Fevers, Consumption, Rheumatism, and all diseases of the Blood. Also weaknesses peculiar to women Its action is prompt and pervasive. Test it once, and you will adopt it as a home remedy. Prices, 50 cents and $1 a bottle. HISCOX & Co., Chemists, New York.

KEEP YOUR SCALP CLEAN.
The best thing out for removing Dandruff is
HEYLINGBERG'S
EUREKA DANDRUFF REMOVER.

It has been thoroughly tested by hundreds of gentlemen, Ladies, and Children, and we have plenty of testimonials of its good results. It is cooling, removes Dandruff, invigorates the roots of the hair, and will quickly produce a strong and beautiful growth in all cases where the roots of the hair are not fully dead, and will stop this unpleasant itching; in fact it is the best hair dressing in use. It is not greasy or sticky, and is warranted free of all oils, and poisins, and will prove the cleanest, safest and most economical Hair Dressing to be found.

Peabody, Mass., Nov. 18, 1881.

Mr. J. J. Heylingberg. Dear Sir:—Both myself and wife have used your Eureka Dandruff Remover for some time, with the most satisfactory results, and recommend it as being indispensable for the toilet. Yours truly,
FRANK A. BRAGDON.

Many more testimonials furnished if desired. Persons suffering from diseases of the scalp will be attended at the house when desired.

A GOOD, ODD FELLOW.

Mr. Cutler, of 21 Lyons St., New Haven, Conn.—How He takes Life Easy now and how He Obtained the Means to Regain his Health.

Mr. Cutler, of 21 Lyons St., is a faithful Odd Fellow, and for forty years a member of Quinipiac Lodge No. 1 (the oldest organization of its kind in the State of Conn.) He is a man much respected in New Haven. Your reporter found him at his pleasant home on Lyons street one afternoon, taking life easy. "You see," he says, "I'm trying to make myself feel a little indisposed. I presume its the lingering results of a Lodge dinner which I attended a while ago down at the beach. I have been, as many of my friends in New Haven know, a sufferer for years from indigestion and biliousness. When I have indulged in too hearty food I've had to suffer at times extremely. As a result I've had to place myself under my physician's care often, and I have taken a great many remedies, but I find after a thorough trial that Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is the most excellent medicine I have ever had knowledge of for any of the disorders above mentioned. It leaves no exhaustive effects, but rather strengthens and regulates the digestive organs in a charming manner. We keep it as a household medicine, and I have recommended it to my friends, for it is an excellent preparation."

Mr. Cutler is a man whose word can be depended upon. His testimony is but a re-echo of the words of thousands in New England who have received relief from the sole use of Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY.

THE

Adjustable Spring Sash-Balance.

PATENTED JULY 16, 1878.

With this device Windows are balanced without the use of weights and cords, and therefore no long boxes on each side of the sash are required. The adjustment to each window according to the weight of its sash and glass by tightening or loosening of its spring is very simple. It is always easy of access to take out for any desirable adjustment, and is applicable to

ANY KIND OF WINDOWS, WHETHER NEW OR OLD STYLE,

Assisting in the opening and holding them at any point to which the lower sash may be raised, or the upper lowered, for the purpose of ventilation and comfort. The general testimony of those whose houses have been supplied with these fixtures for three years is that they are a great convenience, and SATISFACTION IS WARRANTED.

Sold, and if required, applied to windows by

PROBATE NOTICE.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Essex ss. Probate Court.

To the Heirs at-Law, next of Kin, and all other persons interested in the Estate of JACOB BODGE, late of Peabody, in said county, yeoman, deceased: GREETING:

WHEREAS, a certain instrument purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased has been presented to said Court, for Probate, by Jacob G. Bodge, who prays that letters testamentary may be issued to him the executor therein named.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court, to be held at Salem, in said county of Essex, on the first Monday of May, next, at nine o'clock before noon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.

And said Jacob G. Bodge is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper called the Peabody Press, printed at Peabody, the last publication to be two days at least before said Court.

Witness, George F. Choate, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this thirty-first day of March, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three.

Going to Get Whipped.

It beats all how different people will look at the same article in a newspaper in a different way. A few weeks ago The Sun published an article about young men who get drunk, when in the presence of girls they are engaged to, and advised girls to give such fellows the shake. We have several letters from mothers, saying "God Bless You," as make a fellow's eyes spring a leak, and we have felt like saying, "don't mention it, mother," and letting the matter drop. But to-day we had a letter from a young fellow who says "God bless you," only he spells "bless" in a different way. He has got a hot box. He says he has been engaged to one of the handsomest girls in his city, for two years, and no trouble has ever come to them except her sorrow at his dissipated habits, until that article appeared in The Sun. Now he says she has broken the engagement, and says she will never marry him, and the worst of it is she seems happier than she has before for years, her mother has grown ten years younger, and he feels as though he should die. He lays it all to us and says he will whip us on sight. Well, there is a business look to this certainly. Going to whip an editor for talking sense. Here we have been talking nonsense for years, and never got whipped, and for a little sense, have got to be trounced. The world is going wrong. And so the girl is handsome? Well, that's the kind these drunken whelps always pick out. They have got sense enough to know a pretty girl, drunk or sober. And she is happier than she she has been for years. That is worth being whipped for. The wearing of a black eye for making an unhappy, handsome girl happy, would be worth the money. Such a black eye ought to be worn proudly, and pointed to as one would point to an honorable scar, or a wreath on the brow. Of course you don't have to poultice a laurel wreath with beef steak, to take the soreness out, as you do the black eye, and it does not look so well, but it is all right. And the poor old mother has grown ten years younger since her daughter has broken her engagement with the drunken young man? That is better yet, and it is worth two black eyes. Black both of them, young fellow, and italicize the nose, and with the knowledge that two people have been made happy, we shall take the medicine like a man, if we take it. But it is barely possible we shouldn't take it. Does it stand to reason that we should allow a drunken coward to whip us, for speaking the truth? For a young man who is engaged to the handsomest girl in the city, and gets drunk in her presence, is a coward, who would whip her if she was his wife. What would we be doing while such a youth, with his skin full of benzine, was whipping us on sight? This young man has never whipped any editors, evidently. He has never had to be carried out on a window shutter, to a hospital, and lay in a stupor while the doctors set his bones, and has never laid in a delirium for months, and seen the air full of sorrel-topped editors walking over him with hunting boots on. He should commence down low and work up gradually to editors. Let him attend a few ward caucuses, with their rows, and take in a few summer garden picnics, and balls, and prize fights, and if he lives, then he can think about whipping a newspaper man. But he wants to learn to pray, and it is best to bid adieu to friends, and pay up whisky bills, for there is nothing that injures a young man's reputation so much as to have his trunk attached, after he has been buried by the authorities, for an old liquor bill. In addition to announcing that our office hours for being whipped at sight for articles that appear in the paper, are from eight A. M. to six P. M., we will state that the advice to girls who are engaged to drunkards is still in force, and if they will take it to themselves, and ship the drunkards before it is everlastingly too late, and thus make themselves and their mothers happy, we will take the chances on a whipping from the drunkard in every case, and make them a present when they marry a sober young man. Dont hang on to any drunkard for fear he will whip us.—Peck's Sun.

For Dyspepsia, Costiveness, Sick Headache, Chronic Diarrhœa, Jaundice, Impurity of the Blood, Fever and Ague, Malaria, and all Diseases caused by Derangement of Liver, Bowels and Kidneys.

SYMPTOMS OF A DISEASED LIVER.

Bad Breath; Pain in the Side, sometimes the pain is felt under the Shoulder-blade, mistaken for Rheumatism; general loss of appetite; Bowels generally costive, sometimes alternating with lax; the head is troubled with pain, is dull and heavy, with considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of leaving undone something which ought to have been done; a slight, dry cough and flushed face is sometimes an attendant, often mistaken for consumption; the patient complains of weariness and debility; nervous, easily startled; feet cold or burning, sometimes a prickly sensation of the skin exists; spirits are low and despondent, and, although satisfied that exercise would be beneficial, yet one can hardly summon up fortitude to try it—in fact, distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred when but few of them existed, yet examination after death has shown the Liver to have been extensively deranged.

It should be used by all persons, old and young, whenever any of the above symptoms appear.

Persons Traveling or Living in Unhealthy Localities, by taking a dose occasionally to keep the Liver in healthy action, will avoid all Malaria, Bilious attacks, Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Depression of Spirits, etc. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage.

If You have eaten anything hard of digestion, or feel heavy after meals, or sleepless at night, take a dose and you will be relieved.

Time and Doctors' Bills will be saved by always keeping the Regulator in the House!

For, whatever the ailment may be, a thoroughly safe purgative, alterative and tonic can never be out of place. The remedy is harmless and does not interfere with business or pleasure.

IT IS PURELY VEGETABLE,

And has all the power and efficacy of Calomel or Quinine, without any of the injurious after effects.

A Governor's Testimony.

Simmons Liver Regulator has been in use in my family for some time, and I am satisfied it is a valuable addition to the medical science.

J. GILL SHORTER, Governor of Ala.

Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, of Ga., says: Have derived some benefit from the use of Simmons Liver Regulator, and wish to give it a further trial.

"The only Thing that never fails to Relieve."—I have used many remedies for Dyspepsia, Liver Affection and Debility, but never have found anything to benefit me to the extent Simmons Liver Regulator has. I sent from Minnesota to Georgia for it, and would send further for such a medicine, and would advise all who are similarly affected to give it a trial as it seems the only thing that never fails to relieve.

P. M. JANNEY, Minneapolis, Minn.

Dr. T. W. Mason says: From actual experience in the use of Simmons Liver Regulator in my practice I have been and am satisfied to use and prescribe it as a purgative medicine.

Take only the Genuine, which always has on the Wrapper the red Z Trade-Mark and Signature of J. H. ZEILIN & CO.

Shaker Liniment

CURES

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Inflammations, Lame Back, Enlarged Glands, Toothache, Croup, Sprains, Chronic Diseases of the Joints and Muscles, Bruises, Gout, Quinsy, Sore Throat, Swellings, Frosted Feet, Chilblains, and all Diseases of an Inflammatory Nature.

Recommended by Physicians.

Dr. W. C. Sylvester says: "I have examined the formula of the Shaker Liniment, and I use it in my family and recommend it to all sufferers from Neuralgia and Rheumatism. It is better than any other liniment."

A. Hanson, Boston Wire Works, 75 to 81 Cornhill, says: "My wife was cured of Neuralgia.—Four applications cured me of Rheumatism, and Mr. Lord, my neighbor, who has been on crutches fifteen years, obtained relief from less than one bottle of the Shaker Liniment."

Chas. Prescott, Merchant, Randolph, says: "Send me three dozen Shaker Liniment. My customers have confidence in it, and I can consistently recommend it."

Dr. U. K. Mayo, 378 Tremont street, says: "It is the most effective remedy that ever came to my notice, and I cheerfully recommend it."

An Old Nurse says: "If the directions are followed, not one case of croup in a thousand will prove fatal."

J. F. Sawtell, 124 Cambridge street, was cured of Rheumatism, and says: "The Shaker Liniment cured me, and I would advise Rheumatics to use it."

The Boston Traveller says: "Such cures (Mr. Sawtell's) place The Shaker Liniment at the head of all Rheumatic remedies."

Mrs. C. A. Sylvester of the Sawin Academy Sherborn, who was cured of Neuralgia of the heart, says: "Its effects are almost magical. I will cheerfully recommend it to my friends."

E. N. Cummings, the well known Sunday-school worker, formerly of Woburn, now of the firm of Welsh & Cummings, Lynn, says: "The Shaker Liniment cured my wife of an Enlarged Joint, and myself of Acute Inflammation."

C. H. Lewis, Framingham, says: "It gave me quick relief for Rheumatism, and it is the best liniment that I ever used."

Hon. A. Maynard, the extensive manufacturer and founder of the town of Maynard, Mass., who was cured of Neuralgia, says: "By the use of the Shaker Liniment I obtained almost immediate relief and unhesitatingly recommend it to my friends."

L. H. Allen, Station Agent at Rockbottom, says: "I received decided benefit from the Shaker Liniment for Rheumatism, and I have not heard of a case of Neuralgia or Rheumatism that it has not benefitted."

L. J. Juffs, the well known manufacturer of Hudson and Boston, says: "I have seen such proofs of the efficacy of the Shaker Liniment for Neuralgia that I heartily recommend it.

J. E. Brigerton, Manager of the "Golden Rule," says: "The Shaker Liniment gave me immediate relief. It is a wonderful remedy."

Dramatic and Musical.

The days of the reigning sensational play at the Boston Theatre are numbered. Soon another attraction will supplant upon the stage "£50,000; a story of Pluck." Those who have deferred seeing this piece, with its fine scenery and startling realistic effects, should bear this fact in mind.

"Love and Money," the London success, which is soon to have the first production in this country at the Boston Theatre, is said to be a strongly written play, Charles Reade having given to the story some highly effective work. It is to be elegantly staged by Manager Tompkins, and the cast will be very noteworthy.

For its closing performances Mr. W. H. Gillette's amusing play, "The Professor," is the attraction announced at the Park this week. The piece has been seen here before, and the favor then accorded it will be continued, probably, during this brief and final revival. The author-actor will essay the title role, which he played so capitally; Miss Belle Jackson and the original Madison square company furnishing the support.

This week "Monte Cristo," made so famous by Fechter years ago, will be presented at the Globe with a fine cast, Mr. James O'Neill appearing in the dual role of Edmond Dantes and the Count. Next week there will be a week of French Opera under Manager Graue.

This evening closes the long run of "Iolanthe" at the Bijou Theatre, and the new Opera of "Pounce & Co.," will be produced to-morrow evening.

It is Manager Daniel Frohman's intention to send Stage Manager David Belasco to all the larger cities and dress the stage for "Young Mrs. Winthrop's" appearance, using the original Madison Square scenery, which has been so favorably commented upon, as a departure in stage furniture, by the New York critics. Mr. Belasco is the stage director who performed the feat of changing the first scene—the cabin of the Rogers to the studio scene in Paris—in "Esmeralda," in the remarkable time of fifty-nine seconds.

The comedy of "In Paradise," in which Mr. J. T. Raymond appears in the chief character, will be played in Salem in a few weeks. This piece is called by many of the critics, the best play in which this favorite actor has ever starred.

Next Friday evening our readers will have an opportunity of seeing Margaret Mather in the play of "Romeo and Juliet," as she appears in Mechanic Hall under the management of Moulton & Johnson. Her success has been phenomenal. In the Park Theatre, she was greeted with full house and cordial approbation. Young and beautiful, of great natural abilities, she seems to be Shakespeare's ideal of a Juliet. A full house is assured and we advise our readers to secure seats at once.

N. W. Andrews & Co. will present only a Farmer's Daughter at Mechanic Hall on Thursday evening, April 20. It has been played one hundred and fifty nights in New York and this is the third year of its very great success.

There was a full house to see Barlow & Wilson's Minstrels last Friday night in Salem. Schoolcraft and Coes are great favorites as are all the other members of the troupe.

Monday evening Leavitt's Gigantean Minstrels performed at Mechanic Hall. There should have been a larger attendance. The musical portion of the show was unusually fine—and the numerous encores were fitly deserved.

Next Tuesday evening, April 24, N. W. Andrews & Co. will bring Joseph Proctor to Salem, in his well known character of Jibbenainosy in the Nick of the Woods.

SOUTH PEABODY.—Last Thursday evening did not prove very pleasant so far as the weather was concerned, and tended to give Prof. Churchill a rather slim house, the hall being hardly half filled. Judging, however, from the goodly number of our prominent citizens present, the audience did not lack in quality as well as in quantity. Surely all who did venture forth from their comfortable firesides to hear the distinguished elocutionist, were richly repaid for their trouble. Prof. Churchill secured the sympathy of his audience at once and kept it throughout. His rendering of both pathetic and comic selections was unique, disclosing the power of the master. The pathos of such incidents as are depicted in "The Strike," and "Surly Tim," one is made to feel in the moistening effect, by the Professor's skillful interpretations, seizing as he does upon the true feature and spirit of the scene, and translating them into living pictures before the mind's eye, by his perfect naturalness of emotion, tone and action. His power of mimicry was laughingly conspicuous in his rendering of the "Charity Dinner." The individuality of each speaker is kept distinct, the Professor passing from one to the other with perfect ease. Who having once looked upon the face of that complacent "Secretary" and pompous "Alderman" can ever recall them without a smile. Father Phil's Subscription List" showed their resistible power of the Professor, while his rendering of "Sandy McDonald's Signal" was just rich. We noticed also the facility displayed by the Professor, in the use of the different dialects he employed, Irish, Scotch, Lancashire, French, etc. Altogether the evening proved a most enjoyable one to all present. It seemed a pity that not more of our citizens could be present. Is it true that only third or fourth rate entertainments have attractive power to fill our largest hall? Or will our people in general only attend a "free lecture?" If this is the tendency of things, there is some doubt as to the wisdom of such a course of lectures. But as these lectures are to continue, will not the Lecture Committee secure such a reader as Prof. Churchill occasionally? The presence of a large number from the South Church and Congregation prevented the entertainment from being a financial failure, proving themselves as ever the staunch friends and helpers of the Rockville Church.

As Fred Sawyer of Reading was driving on Lynnfield street, last Monday, and when near the Alms House, a portion of the harness gave way, the horse became frightened, shied suddenly, bringing the carriage into violent contact with a pile of wood on the side of the road. Mr. S. was thrown out by the shock and it was thought his collar bone was broken. He also sustained several bruises about the head.

A large band of gypsies are encamped in the field opposite Brown's Pond.

H. N. Batchelder commenced the grading, and filling in with gravel, at Spring pond, last Monday.

The Lynn and Boston R. R. have the track laid as far as the old Trask house in Wyoma.

The house of Geo. E. Marsh, that is being built for him on the site of the Mary Marsh estate, will have a splendid view of the whole village. The work is being pushed forward as rapidly as possible, by the carpenters having it in charge.

Putnam & Linehan made their first blast last Monday at the ledge on Washington street, tearing out a number of tons of rock.

Hannah Stone has opened a cigar, tobacco and confectionery store, in the stand recently occupied by her as a grocery store.

J. A. Trask is remodeling the chimneys on the house of Mr. Samuel Brown.

There will be a Sabbath School concert at the vestry next Sunday evening.

A new windmill for pumping water has been erected at Mr. Orlando Newhall's on Lynnfield street.

A new flag station and waiting room is being erected at Newhall's crossing, on the South Reading branch.

Two Frenchmen and a large performing bear, frightened a horse belonging to the gypsies near the ice house. His bearship did not seem to mind it much.

The Salem Schubert Club will give a dramatic entertainment at Plummer Hall, during the first week in May. The bill will include the drama entitled "The Dowagers," and a comic operetta, "The Gallant Garrotter."

Mackenzie & Swan, of Salem, have in stock an elegant assortment of all the newest and most fashionable designs in spring suitings, for men and boys. If you want a nobby pair of pants, or a fine wedding suit, or a business coat, or a spring overcoat, made to order, don't forget Mr. Mackenzie's long experience as a practical tailor. It is remarkable what progress there is made in some lines of business by some of our enterprising business houses, among which Wilmot's large Clothing House stands as one of the most enterprising. Ever since this house has opened in Salem, it has shown the best of enterprise and straight-forward business dealings, always standing to the front of all competitors, and has consequently been a perfect success since it first opened its doors to the public.

For proof of the enterprise of this house you want to see the magnificent display of wax figures it makes in their large show windows, and also see some of the handsome and valuable presents they are giving away, such as Watches, Clocks, Roller Skates, Bats and Balls, etc. Such a business house is an honor to Salem, and ought to be patronized all it is possible by its citizens.—Observer.

Mayor Hill has been appointed Deputy Grand Commander by the Grand Encampment of Massachusetts for District No. 5, comprising Uniformed Degree Camp No. 5 of Odd Fellows of Salem and vicinity.

William R. Weeks announces that he is ready with a finely selected stock of dress goods, and in all the newest and most fashionable shades. Mr. Weeks makes a specialty also of cloaks and sacks, and his assortment is unusually full. In small wares, gloves and buttons, the store is a desirable place to trade.

Humorous writers have now a chance to gain fame and "put money in their purse." The Charles A. Vogeler Co., of Baltimore, proprietors of that famous remedy St. Jacobs Oil, offer $650 in prizes for humorous sketches, set forth in a circular which they will send to would-be competitors on application. The offer is divided into classes; $150, three of $100 each, and four of $50 each. At least two out of the eight prizes ought to come into this neighborhood, where the great remedy is so immensely popular and where it has performed many notable cures. Let the funny men come to the front and scoop in the cash.

VOL. 24. PEABODY, MASS., WEDNESDAY EVENING, APRIL 25, 1883. NO. 18.

OH! WHAT CAN THE MATTER BE?

Only This, Wilmot's Watches Beat 45c Sleds

Out and out, and Low Prices, Square Dealings, Good Goods and lots of them, bring trade, and that is what we have got, and that's what's the matter with our competitor. Our competitor who sports the CIGAR SHOP SIGN seems to feel bad, and we don't blame him, but he must remember that old Dame Fortune is a great tilter of trade, and if she has seen fit to put us on the upward slant he should not feel so bad and tell everybody about it, but keep it to himself and try to do better next time.

☞ TO THE PUBLIC. We don't believe in mud throwing and don't believe in that way of doing business, but if our competitor wishes, we will make it a specialty, (as he has been in the habit of doing,) for his special benefit, and he may be able to get a few points.

WE WILL NOW DROP BOY'S PLAY AND
COME TO BUSINESS.

During the next 30 days we shall offer some of the best bargains ever seen in the Clothing business at 25 per cent. less than any firm in this city, (we make no exceptions.) Remember that we are the only dealer in Essex County that manufactures their own clothing—we make no exception, consequently we can and do sell lower than any other house in the city. At the same time we give every man or boy who buys a Suit of Clothes or Spring Overcoat for $10.00 or more, a Genuine Nickel Silver stem-winding Watch, Chain and Charm, valued at $6.00.

☞ Remember that every watch we give is warranted a perfect time keeper, as we don't believe in cheap trifles, such as 45c sleds, or cheap pasteboard trinkets, as some of our competitors are in the habit of giving. If you don't want a watch we will give you instead

AN ELEGANT NICKEL CLOCK.

And to every boy who buys clothing to the amount of $8.00 or more, we shall give

A Splendid Pair of ROLLER SKATES valued at $3.00.

Or to every boy who buys Clothing to the amount of $5.00 or more, we shall give

A Fine BAT and BALL valued at $1.50.

N. B.—We wish it distinctly understood that the prices on our goods remain the same in every respect, and that what we give you we give as a free gift.

☞ Our sole reason for giving away the gifts that we do is that we wish to introduce to the public our enormous stock of Clothing, which they will find far superior to any they have ever seen before.

We are now prepared to show the largest stock of Men's and Boys' Clothing ever shown in Essex county at the following prices.

Men's Suits, $6, 8, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 18, 20 to 30.

Men's Pantaloons, 75c, 1.50, 1.75, 2, 2.25, 2.50, 3, 3.50, 4, 4.50 to 8.

Boys' Suits, $1.50, 2.50, 3, 3.25, 3.50 4, 4.50, 5, 7, 8, 10 to 15.

Boys' Pants, 40c, $1, 1.50, 2, 2.50, 3, 3.50, 4, 4.50 to 5.

In our Custom Department

We are showing the largest and finest line of Cloths ever seen in Salem, at the following low prices :

Suits made to order,	$15, 18, 20, 22, 25 to 40.
Pantaloons made to order,	$4, 4.75, 5, 6, 7 to 11.
Spring Overcoats made to order,	$13, 15, 18, 20, 22 to 30.

Hats, Caps and Furnishing Goods.

In this department will be found all the novelties of the season, which we shall offer at nearly wholesale prices.

Have you seen the Grand Display of Wax Figures in our large show windows? If you have not it will pay you to come miles to see them. We give you all a cordial invitation to Come and see for Yourself.

That our stock is larger than any three stores in Salem, our prices 22 per cent. less than any dealer in Essex county, and our styles better than ever seen in any Clothing House in the state.

STRICTLY ONE PRICE.

Wilmot's Clothing House,

250 and 254 Essex St., Salem.

MESSRS. EDITORS.—It is evident to many, if not to all, that the current discussion upon the management of town affairs, which has been going on at the Farmers' Club in West Peabody, has created more than a ripple of excitement, that it has stirred up an interest constantly growing more instead of less,—an interest, doubtless, not contemplated at the start; but which if only directed rightly can not fail to be of benefit to our community. It has manifested a tendency, whether from conviction on the part of the chief speaker, or from a desire merely to clinch his side of the argument, which, unless checked, will prove detrimental to the interests professedly guarded. The reverend gentleman who poses as chief justice upon town matters, is a man of much reading, much eloquence, much sarcasm, much force in speaking, and has the power to control the most of those who compose his audience. Without impugning the gentleman's motive, or belittling his undoubted ability, and his strong powers as a debater and speaker, it is nevertheless proper to say that he has not treated his subject with a proper degree of fairness, and that the term is applicable to him that "he is a man of vast and varied misinformation." The wide spread circulation of Mr. Spaulding's arguments we believe would influence the credit of the town unjustly, and create an entirely erroneous idea of the way in which our town finances are managed. On the general question as to whether it has been wisest for the town to procure in the time which it has, the public property it now possesses, there is room for an honest difference of opinion. But on the question as to the wise management of town matters, subject to the fact that the voters (not the town officials) have made the conditions what they have been, a careful investigator must decide that those in authority are entitled to commendation. The reverend gentleman has made some good suggestions in the course of his argument, which it is but fairness to acknowledge, such as a general watchfulness over increasing expenditure, the subject of having auditors, the wisdom of giving discounts on taxes, the publication of all items of public expense, and probably some other points not here enumerated. These are subjects eminently worth considering. There is a great deal to-day said about the "trend" of scripture. It seems to us that the general "trend" of the gentleman's speeches is wrong. Assertion is not argument, sarcasm is not logic, eloquence is not necessarily correct, and what we want is "facts," as Thomas Gradgrind says in Hard Times "facts, sir, facts." Bearing in mind that the voters as a whole, and not the town officials or any particular party or clique, are responsible for the numerous public works now completed or in process, let us make a cursory comparison of some of the town's financial management. Recollect, first, that the assessors are sworn to make a just and impartial valuation; secondly, that it is not policy to value too high, because by so doing the State and County taxes are larger.

Take the valuation of the town

Year.	Real Estate.	Personal Estate.
1877	$4,080,800	$2,302,850

an increase of only 2 1-2 per cent. on real estate, and of 11 per cent. on personal. Is this the unjust discrimination against real estate of which complaint is made? Last year the valuation of real estate was increased less than 1 per cent. It must be confessed that the personal valuation was decreased by less than 1 per cent.; various causes contributed to this result, a very important one being the law passed in 1881, in relation to double taxation. The argument is made that there is a chance of doubling the valuation for the purpose of raising the taxes. At the rate of increase from 1877 to 1881, it would require forty years to double up. It is not here claimed that this proportion of increase holds good in every case, but is taken at random. The claim is made right here that the increase is gradual, that real estate has not been unjustly discriminated against, and that a few years are going to see burdens lessened gradually so that the fear of excessive, valuation may be dismissed as chimerical.

Let us take the rate of taxation from 1877 to 1881; it was $13 on a thousand, certainly reasonable, considering the work the voters had declared they must have. Last year it jumped to $16.20; quite an increase, certainly, but even then less than places of equal size and importance. In Woburn, which most nearly compares with us, the rate was $19. Let us make a few tables to see how rapidly the figures are increasing, taking them from reports of

Selectmen's

Dep't	1878	1880	1881	1882	1883
	$74,064	$69,242	$78,544	$141,358	$176,610

In the amount under 1881, is included $8000 for improving Goldthwaite's brook, and the State and County taxes for that municipal year were $3700 more than previous.

In 1882, High Service demanded $55,417. In 1883, State and County taxes increased and large amounts were demanded for the Town House land and the Town House, which voters had decided to have. Deducting these exceptional amounts and the balances show a careful proportion of expense in this department.

The school department, which seems to elicit but little comment, runs along with but little variation. The school houses are built and in fair condition as a rule, and no unusual amount is necessary.

School Dep't	1878	1880	1881	1882	1883
	$24,139	$22,861	$25,642	$23,580	$24,374

Now glance at the fire department.

1878	1880	1881	1882	1883
$3,757	$5,514	$5,714	$6,344	$6,594

In 1881 is included $1000 expense on steamer and $450 for hose. In 1882, special for hose $1000. In 1883 the total was $10,048, but the extra was spent for new hose, horse hose and hook and ladder truck.

We now have a valuable and useful engine house, with serviceable working property, and an exceptionally good department. The whole has cost, it is true, but it will not have to be acquired again. The property at stake in this town justifies the maintenance of a first class fire department, and we have it.

Let us glance at the expense of the Poor Department. The amounts less the receipts for the various years are: a fair increase, except the last item, which shows a difference between its predecesssor, of $3,014. Mr. King explained why this was clearly. The drouth caused a failure in several crops and forty-eight acres of woodland were burned. The last winter was unusually long and severe and the demands upon the overseers larger than will probably be again for years. It is impossible to give every item without making this article of undue proportions; but when Mr. Spaulding gives the number of paupers, he misleads. The number helped at the Alms House were,

1878	1880	1881	1882	1883
$6,417 10	$7,077	$7,404	$6,253	$10,267

1878	1880	1881	1882	1883

It may be possible that some are assisted who are not fairly entitled to aid, but no one who is acquainted with our overseers, three as able and conscientious gentlemen as we have in town, doubts that they would gladly listen to any information about those who receive aid. It is better to err on the side of humanity if at all. It is a grave question, what are the duties of the town towards those whose poverty comes from the intemperance of the ones who should be their support and protection. This article is not intended to include a temperance lecture, but it is fair to say that no solution of the pauper question is possible, until that which causes 75 per cent. of the expense for paupers is checked if not removed. The little episode of the poor mutton served to create diversion at the meeting, but does not need any further comment than to say, if the overseers with the amount they have to buy have been caught but once in twenty years, they have done remarkably well. Is it not fair to compare our expenses with those of Woburn, a town similar in the make up of its population, in the character of its manufactories, and more nearly in every way approximating to us than any other town. The valuation of the two towns are, Peabody, $6,616,150; Woburn, $8,073,271, or a little more than one-fifth the larger. Let us append also a comparison with Quincy, a town which ranks about like Peabody, although not comparing so closely in many respects as Woburn The percentages added refer to the comparison between Peabody and Woburn. The Town Clerk is omitted for the present.

Does not Peabody compare favorably with the other towns?

The water works question seems to trouble our rural brethren. The writer does not feel capable of handling this subject as it should be, but when it is asserted that the town made a worthless purchase when it spent the $125,000 for the Salem and Danvers works, it should be borne in mind that there were men ready to take it if the town did not, and that the Danvers Bleachery was ready and eager to get it, that whatever changes have been, the amount of property sacrificed has been almost nothing compared with the gain. The water works pay nearly all the town interest and will undoubtedly pay all and more, as its benefits are more generally distributed. The town would not have to wait long for parties to take it off us hands.

The Sinking Fund is another subject of trouble with our friends in the West. Under the law of 1875, found in Chap. 29 of General Statutes, the town is obliged to have a sinking fund. This provides that towns shall pay certain kinds of debts (including water debts) by Sinking funds—that is laying aside each year by placing in the care of commissioners expressly chosen, a sum sufficient so that the several sums and accumulated interest (which the town must also pay) shall equal the debt. Enough must be annually appropriated towards water debts to cancel them in thirty years. In 1878 the town owed a large debt (created as we have several times said by the voters) made up as follows:

Water	$138,000
School Houses,	92,000
Engine Houses,	37,000
General,	32,000
Total	$299,000

A sinking fund was therefore created to pay this debt in twenty-seven years, by laying aside $9000 per year, which with interest would at the end of that period extinguish the debt. The law expressly provides that commissioners may invest in their own town notes. It seems a little queer at first to one who has not investigated, but when the commissioners have $10,000 on hand to invest, why not take up a town note instead of letting an outsider have it? As fast as they take up a note it is written on it "part of Sinking Fund of Town of Peabody—not negotiable." This note is valid against the town, but its own agents hold it instead of a stranger, it cannot be used for any purpose, if stolen would be valueless; when all the notes belonging to the fund are taken up the purpose for which they are held is accomplished and they can be destroyed. It may be said, why not invest in other bonds or notes, until a fund is accumulated sufficient to take up all the notes at once. Because the result is the same either way, and the present method far safer and a surer guard against dishonesty, supposing such was intended. In regard to interest paid at Warren Bank, it may be briefly said, that for some time the Town was accustomed to make overdrafts to have ready money, and it was decided to equalize the interest on deposits by interests on overdrafts. When different arrangements were made by the town it got interest on its deposits, although the gain is more apparent than real, considering the interest on borrowed money. In regard to the salary of the town clerk, argument seems foolish to those who understand the matter; for the present town clerk is not only clerk of the town, but ex-officio, clerk of all boards but the water board. In a great many places the town clerk has but a little of the work which ours does. In Quincy for instance, the town clerk gets only $50 salary, but the selectmen pay $300 or $400 for clerical assistance and $100 to have annual reports made up, all of which work our clerk does. The town clerk of Woburn gets $400, but among the miscellaneous expenses of that town will be found $200 for clerical work. Its clerk of selectmen gets $400, its clerk of assessors, $75; its clerk of highway committee, $100; its clerk of overseers, $175; its clerk of health committee, $75; a total of $1,425.

The rate of interest is another subject of distress. It would add too much to this already long article to discuss this at length. Every business man knows that when the money was borrowed in 1873, unusually good terms were secured, and that as fast as practicable the rate is being reduced. Now what do our dear W. Peabody brethren want? They want to separate from us, in the vain delusion that they would be better off. They pay into the town treasury about $5000, more than three-fifths of which they actually get back. The balance above what they would have to pay for state and county taxes anyway, they pay for care of their poor, for use of police and fire department and for the increased value and advantages naturally accruing to a section of a large, prosperous town. There is in many large towns a feeling in the outlying districts that they are paying too much for advantages of which the central portion gets the lion's share; we freely admit there is some danger of this. But with prompt attendance at town meetings, with some one from their section to look after their interests (which they would not always have with three selectmen) with the good feeling we cherish towards them, with more careful study of what they really pay and really get for the pay, our brethren must conclude that it is better to form part of our good town than to struggle along as a small country hamlet. The town has invested it is true in large and important enterprises, but its credit is fine. Its Town House bonds were eagerly taken by the Trustees of the Peabody Institute at 102 and Boston brokers were desirous for them at an advance on that. The various departments are well fitted with property of a character suitable for many years' use. The water department will be a source of more and more income, we have or soon will have a large, elegant, but unpretentious, Town House, the rate of taxation is not large compared with other places, we are increasing in population and there is no reason why any burden should press heavily on us. With economy, watchfulness, and proper liberality, the town must grow yearly into easier circumstances and be more and more desirable to live in. Let us criticise fairly, watch sharply; but in our endeavors to do this, see that we do not fall into the error of unmerited depreciation of public servants and public management, and let us trust our brethren at West Peabody will still see their way clear to stand shoulder to shoulder with us and share our prosperity and our future greatness; we want them all, including the genial gentleman whose criticism we are compelled to disapprove.

The closing concert for the season, of the Salem Schubert Club, was held in Plummer Hall last evening—the principal event being the performance of Hofmann's Melusina, which the club has had in preparation for some time. Mr. and Mrs. Georg Henschel were the leading soloists—and it is safe to say that they were richly enjoyed by the audience and the members of the Club. Miss Mary H. Howe sang the contralto music and a song, "There was an Ancient King," by Henschel, the author himself playing the accompaniment. Mr. Jacob Benzing also rendered in a spirited manner "The Two Grenadiers," by Schumann. A goodly number were present from Peabody and the Naumkeag Street Railway had an extra car in waiting, even at the early hour at which the concert closed, to convey their patrons home.

PENALTY FOR SIN.—April 21, Thomas Hunt, for being drunk, was sent to the Alms House for two months.

23, Michael Killeen, for drunkenness, fined $5.85.

Wm. Shaw, arrested as a common drunkard, was sent to the Alms House for four months.

A meeting of the County Commissioners was held last Friday in regard to the widening of Washington street. They visited the scene of action and gave the town permission to carry on the work.

Mr. Otis F. Brown, for Fitch Poole Council A. L. of H., paid the widow of the late Joseph Walker, a draft for $1000 yesterday, being the amount of his life insurance.

Read the mammoth advertisement of the NAUMKEAG CLOTHING CO., in another column, and remember that their grand opening takes place on Friday.

WEST PEABODY.

At the meeting of the West Peabody Farmers' Club last Friday evening, the discussion of the Town Report was resumed. J. S. Needham was the first speaker. He referred to the pride one feels in his native country and town, and that he had pride in his native place, living as he did in a house which was built in Salem, then it was in Danvers, South Danvers and Peabody. It is a big town. Have we not the chromo of the greatest potentate on earth, and no one can wrest it from us. He paid his respects to the Town House,—spoke of the old curfew—and said the building was born after the curfew bell rung. He referred to the cemetery for which $600 was appropriated. It was bought at a high price, and during the past year there had been sold 3 lots, two of them 20 feet square—the other smaller. More than half our dead are buried in consecrated ground. See where we are coming to. In 33 years we shall have sold about an acre. If we continue to appropriate $600 per year, with the $7000 which it cost at first, in 1060 years it would take 240,000 miles of silver dollars to cover the expenditure. He could not see how the Water Works were paying. Last year the revenue was $20,000. $5,500 of that came from the Bleachery and Salem Cotton Factory. We pumped 139 millions of gallons and got $14,500 for it. It cost $1800 to pump it. In Boston the price for water was two cents per gallon. At that rate we should have received $27,800. The water is not consumed by the families, but by the manufactories, and the horses at our drinking fountains. He thought the interest was more than they could possibly make. If he lived in the city (meaning the thickly settled portion of the town) he should accept and want all these conveniences, and be willing to pay for them. We are farmers—all we want is farmers surroundings. When Lynn was incorporated as a city, Swampscott and Nahant asked and received a separation. When Chelsea was incorporated, Revere and Winthrop did the same. All we of West Peabody had to do was to ask for it, and we would obtain it. The town was divided by the wish of So. Danvers. We had no part in it. Mr. Needham referred to land which B. G. Proctor refused to purchase in 1820 for $1600—and which was worth now a round million. The tanneries were the nucleus for this rise in valuation. The land here in West Peabody was not worth so much. That was the beginning of a rise in estates. When the line of division was run through District No. 10, we protested, but the people in other portions of the town said "we were nothing but a grasshopper region up here." They found we were around some if it was so. We engaged Otis P. Lord to advocate our claims, and the line was pushed a little further to the West. The town afterwards took the school houses from our jurisdiction, appraised and paid for them and built this one. It is six miles across it. The district covers 3-5 of the territory of this town. It was thought if we only had a graded school it would be all right. It is all paid for, yet we owe $123,000. Could not see the gain.

The speaker then referred to Andrew Jackson, who gave us the money to build our Alms House. There was a surplus revenue in the treasury, and Gen. Jackson recommended that it be divided among the states. Half the Western cities are bankrupt. Municipalities are coming to it. There are two remedies for this, a new valuation, and new administration. He looked at the town report. The bonds, he said, would not bring one half what they were valued at. The engine house bonds and the town house bonds would not bring 10 per cent. The water works could not be sold for near what they were valued at. He noticed that the old town house was valued at $8000,—two years ago it was appraised at $14,000. Here was a depreciation of $6000 in two years. He did not know as that was paid for—where is there any thing that is paid for? He could find three things that were paid for, and those were built two hundred years ago—the three pounds. That was all he could find that the town owned clean and clear. He had come to the conclusion that they should ask the Legislature for a town of these three districts. They would have in the division $400,000 worth of property. On that amount, at the rate of present taxation, we could raise $6480. The town could be run for $2600, which would be a saving of about $4000. They would not pay $100 or $200 or $300 for a town clerk. Our share of the public property would be $32,880—of the debt $23,000. He wanted a new valuation or a set off. Every dollar here pays for just as much as in the city, and if we want the water we can't have it.

Poet's Corner.

Don't Lose Your Grip.

Don't tell the world when your pocket is empty,
If you its favor would hold;
'Tis sad to admit, but every one knows it,
We're measured to-day by our gold.
No, tell not the world, though hunger oppress you,
But keep a stiff upper lip;
If it's known you are down, 'twill ring through the town,
"That chap is losing his grip."
Then keep a stiff upper lip, my boy;
Yes, keep a stiff upper lip;
For men with a frown, will say when you're down,
Why didn't he hold his grip?

Though work be scarce and the hearthstone cold,
Don't tell the world your sorrow;
But heat your own iron and strike it when hot—
It may mould into gold on the morrow.
No, tell not the world, though the adverse stream
Threatens to wreck your ship;
If men know you are down, 'twill ring through the town,
"That chap is losing his grip."

Each man you will find has his burden and cross,
Each home its sorrow and care;
Then what good to tell your troubles, my friend,
When all have their own ills to bear?
Then tell not the world, though its storms beat upon you,
And breakers threaten your ship;
But sail your own craft, and none will dare say,
"That chap is losing his grip."
Then keep a stiff upper lip, my boy;
Yes, keep a stiff upper lip;
For men with a frown, will say when you're down,
Why didn't he hold his grip?

The Darkened Way.

BY LYDIA DAVIS THOMSON.

In the land of the Past is a beautiful spot,
Where I'd fondly deemed I forever might stay,
But, alas, with the joy that was mine I forgot
That earth-given bliss like the dew fades away.

And I dreamed me a sweet and a beautiful dream,
While I dwelt in that land so bewildering bright,
For the joy that unceasingly reigned there supreme Overgilded it all wtih a great wondrous light.

But, ah me! One morning I woke to behold
That under my sky a tiny cloud lay;
That gathered in darkness fold upon fold,
And hid all the brightness forever away.

Henceforth must I grope in the gloom while I stay—
Till I wake in the light of just Heaven's clear dawn;
That shall shatter the cloud that has darkened my way—
For the dream, and the beautiful past is gone.

A DISH FIT FOR LUCULLUS.

On the street called Okiyo-koge (High resting place of the Mikado), in Tokio, is a restaurant "where persons can enjoy the supreme delight of broiled eels." In company with a friend the writer recently visited the eel house and was shown by the proprietor into the kitchen. A cook selected a vigorously-squirming fish, struck its head smartly upon a wooden block placed upon the floor and kneeling by it grasped the creature's neck, inserted a knife in the left side of the vertebrae and dexterously ran it down to the tail, then rapidly applied his instrument to the other side of the backbone and repeated the process, leaving the eel split open. Holding up the head, to which was attached the vertebrae and latteral bones enclosing the intestines, he bowed and said: —"There is not a splinter left in the fish." The operator washed the block, chopped the flattened eel into three-inch lengths and shouted to a cook, who advanced and removed it on a dish. We advanced to a range and saw another cook skewering the pieces of eel on long bamboo splints. Then he placed them on the rods over the glowing coals, and when one side was browned dexterously picked them up with a pair of iron chopsticks and turned them. After they were thoroughly cooked he seized the fish with the same instrument and plunged it into a vessel containing old shoyu, which was as thick and dark as molasses. I took my chopsticks in my right hand, inserted the points in the fish, broke off a morsel and ate. Ye gods! It was delicious, rich, tender, delicately flavored and boneless? I drew my box toward me, nodded approvingly at the attendant and enjoyed the delectable food. The smiling girl brought in box after box, the contents of each being nicer than the last. I have partaken of fried oysters at home, broiled fish in all countries and the delicacies of every clime, but have never more thoroughly enjoyed any dish than I did those unagi.

All pure, sweet laughter is a sign of happiness, and happy people are much more apt to be virtuous than the unhappy. Be good and you will be happy is hardly a more valid saying than be happy and you will be good

J. F. Ingraham then spoke in defense of the Town Report. He had carefully read Mr. Spaulding's criticisms, but found them very dry. Every citizen, however, should know about the report, should study it. This year it has been put into the crucible. It has been assaulted, horse, foot and dragoons. Mr. Ingraham found three classes of growlers; First, those who became so from nature. They were constitutional growlers. It is impossible to stop them. Second, these who do not know any better, who growl in imitation of others, and because they do. Third, those who growl because they think their constitutional rights have been invaded. They are the watch dogs of our civilization, the men who sound the note of alarm, the honest growlers. In this latter class the speaker classed Mr. Spaulding. As Mr. Spaulding remarked in the beginning, he proposed to let the report do its own whistling. He first referred to the comparison made by Mr. Spaulding between the report of 1856 and this last one. He had stated the expenses of the health department to be $117.37; whereas they were actually $146.71. The report of 1856 was only for nine months, and not for a year. The hearers were given to understand by Mr. Spaulding that this report was like the others, whereas it was only for a portion of a year. Mr. Spaulding's statement of the debt was then compared with the real debt, and it was shown that it was made up without regard to the assets of the town. If an accountant is to look into the affairs of a firm, considered bankrupt, he looks as well to the assets as the liabilities. With this in mind the appearance of the debt is a different affair. In reference to the inking fund which Mr. S. said did not exist, because a town could not owe itself, on page 71 of the Town Report, Mr. Ingraham said it appeared that the town appropriated $1600 as a sinking fund. The committee took $1000 and converted it into a new Town House bond. The town of Peabody is paying interest to itself on its own debt. There is nothing more conclusive of a man's debt than to pay interest on an obligation. He agreed with Mr. Spaulding that the books of the town should be audited, but did not agree with him that there was no one in town able to do it. Even if a member of the Selectmen had given that as his opinion, he thought it was ridiculous. He could name fifty men capable of doing it, The speaker thought the teachers not paid too high; the only suggestion he would make was that teachers are employed for our primary schools who are not mature enough. In regard to Selectmen, what is a man worth who cannot earn $3.00 per day? Don't we want men of the best judgment in this position? To get good work we must pay for it. Mr. Spaulding says the police are too expensive. Can it be proved? He challenged any proof—any array of solid figures that could prove the expenditure too expensive. Who can tell the value of a police force? Suppose they cost $5000, and they prevent a murder, is it money wrongly expended? There is no town that he knew, of the size, with so little crime. Mr. Spaulding would have spies put on the town officers. That was a curious statement. What is the character of a spy? One of the most detestable things that crawl—the essence of meanness. They are everything but what they ought to be. Mr. Ingraham said the town started with a debt of $21,000, according to the statement of Mr. Spaulding. He could not find it. No report of any debt stated the amount until 1858. Every report previous to that year, contained the information that the selectmen were unable to ascertain the exact indebtedness. He did not know where the figures came from. The speaker referred to the duties of the town clerk, and what he did to earn the $1560, on which he was growing rich fast, and referred to the fact that he drew 1600 orders a year. Mr. Poor was a deserving, and what was better, an honest man. Mr. Spaulding advised the town to purchase decrepit, worn out horses. 9-10 of the horses of expressmen cost as much as the town horses. How is it that Mr. Spaulding berates the town for purchasing an old worn out pipe? Mr. Needham, was very much mistaken in his figures. Thought he had a slight touch of that official blindness charged upon others. The speaker found a clear net gain of $11,701.13 in the water works. The town of Danvers expends $5000 for the use of hydrants. It costs the town of Peabody not a cent. In regard to the discount of three per cent on the taxes, he thought it a debatable question that it favored the rich man. The man who pays cash for his goods is always entitled to a discount. The man who purchases goods in large quantities can always trade with more advantage. In regard to increase in value of property, Mr. Ingraham thought every building erected, every improvement made, had increased the value, and that West Peabody was no exception to the rule. He did not understand why Mr. Spaulding brought out the old tax bill on his farm in 1790—except to prove that the place was poverty stricken. In regard to the publication of the names of those who receive help from the town, he did not think it wise. He did not advocate the publication of the misfortunes of the public family. The right hand should not know what the left hand doeth.

At the close of Mr. Ingraham's remarks, Mr. James P. King arose and made a statement in regard to the cemetery near the ponds. He had taken pains to visit it, and the nearest grave was 60 feet from the fountains. In order for water from the graves to get into the pond, it must run up hill at least three feet. It had been surveyed by Mr. Putnam, a good surveyor, and he had given it as his opinion, that no water from the graves could ever run to the ponds. (Here Mr. Spaulding denied that this was the case, claiming that there was an apparent descent on the surface from the graves, and an actual descent below the surface, and that water from the graves would run in different directions, and among them towards the ponds.) Mr. King, however, maintained that he was right. Mr. Spaulding offered to give $50 to the Farmers' Club if he was wrong, if Mr. King would do the same, and take a surveyor and ascertain the fact. Mr. King replied that he was "neither a preacher nor a gambler," and insisted that it had been surveyed, and there was no need of another survey. Mr. King referred to the family in West Peabody helped by the town, and to the family who, Mr. Spaulding claimed, had sold the cord of wood. Mr. Spaulding explained that it was a load of wood. It might have been a cord or only a few feet. It was all the same in principle. Mr. King thought it made all the difference in the world, and also insisted that it was the duty of any one in the neighborhood,—it was the duty of Mr. Spaulding—if he knew of any family receiving aid from the town, not justly entitled to it, to inform the overseers.

Mr. King explained about the stinking mutton. He remembered the circumstance as if it had occurred but yesterday, and had the bill. It was in 1864, and it was bought of a man named English, by whom Ira Foster was employed. One mess only was cooked—its condition was discovered—and Mr. Scott notified the overseers, and it was given to the hogs. The entire amount of the purchase was $30. Mr. King denied that it was the custom of the overseers to give tainted meat to the inmates of the Alms House. He also referred to the fact that at one time the overseers were carrying on a business in which the paupers were employed, which netted from $1000 to $2500 to the town yearly. They were found fault with for it in town meeting, and the election of the overseers was put off until an investigation was had. It was found all right and the overseers re-elected, but later on the business was taken from them, and the remark of the gentleman who complained, cost the town of Peabody several thousand dollars. The discussion was brought to a close by several interrogatories by Mr. Spaulding, Mr. King being asked if the same quality of butter was given to the family at the Alms House, as to the paupers; if it would not be better to take away the tobacco from the paupers, and put that money into a little sugar, instead of giving the inmates molasses to sweeten their tea with. While Mr. Spaulding was asking in reference to the butter for the family and the inmates, Mr. Jacob Osborn, who was an interested spectator of the scene, queried why Mr. Spaulding did not ask if the same kind of shoes were provided, with as much reason? This question was so apt, and showed at once the absurdity of Mr. Spaulding's questions, that Mr. Needham took the floor very excitedly, saying that this club had been in existence three years, and no one had interrupted a speaker. He did not want any one from the center of the town to come up there and interrupt the meetings. He then sat down. (It may be said that no speaker during the entire three evenings has been free from ceaseless interruptions by Mr. Spaulding.) Other questions, such as, if Mr. King knew of a member of the board who had received ice from the town, without paying for it, and if he knew of a large cheese bought by a member of the board, for the inmates, but which they never tasted of? While this was going on, the audience became evidently weary of it, and began to retire, in the midst of which the meeting broke up in confusion. It was not stated whether the discussion would be resumed, or whether anything would be done at the next meeting, or whether there was to be a next meeting. A large number of residents of the centre of Peabody were present, the barge being crowded, as well as several private conveyances.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES! — COMMON SENSE.—When a merchant advertises to sell his goods 25 per cent. less than his competitors, and to give as a present nearly two-thirds the value of his merchandise, he will bear watching.—Our struggling competitor says he gives away no sleds, but will give with every ten dollar suit a watch and chain worth $6. Stop a minute and think of this statement. We propose to sell a much better suit for $6, and one that is all wool. The regular retail price of these watches is $2.50, thus there will be a clear saving of $1.50 to the purchaser, besides getting better garments at our store.—NAUMKEAG CLOTHING CO.—Adv.

The exhibit of Whitcomb & Carter, of Beverly, at the agricultural meeting on Dr. Loring's farm at Salem, last week, commanded much attention for its variety of display. The North American swivel plow was a favorite.—They also exhibited Kemp's manure spread-cultivator, as well as the Perry spring tooth harrow. They were all put in practical operation, this enterprising firm having engaged ten or more men for that purpose. Their exhibit was the largest displayed.

Book Notices.

The North American Review for May contains nine articles. Senator John T. Morgan writes of "Mexico," and sets forth the considerations of commercial advantage between that country and the United States. The Rev. William Kirkus makes a vigorous charge upon the papal system in an article entitled "The Disintegration of Romanism." In "Emerson and Carlyle," Edwin P. Whipple discourses upon the strangely diverse mental and moral characteristics of those two great thinkers. Prof. Felix Adler offers "A Secular View of Moral Training," arguing that the current skeptical habit of thought demands an independent system of practical ethics. "Communism in America," by Prof. Alexander Winchell, gives very forcible expression to the apprehensions of those pessimistic observers who think that they see in our political and social development all the signs of impending national decay. The other articles are "Affinities of Buddhism and Christianity," by the Rev. Dr. James Freeman Clarke; "Woman as an Inventor," by Matilda Joslyn Gage; "College Endowments," by Rossiter Johnson; and "Extradition," by A. G. Sedgwick. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York, and for sale by booksellers generally.

THE WHEELMAN for May is a unique enterprise. No sport ever had such an able representative as bicycling possesses in this excellent periodical. The tasteful cover, the splendid illustrations, well drawn and well engraved, and the articles themselves rank The Wheelman with our best magazines. The May number of this journal opens with "A Summer Ramble among the Black Hills," with appropriate illustrations of scenery and incidents among the mountains. "The Citizen's Trip to Boston" is also well illustrated and full of interest as showing phases of life among bicycle Clubs. It relates in a light, pleasnt style the excursion of the Citizen's Bicycle Club to Boston, where they were entertained by brother wheelmen, with whom they had many delightful runs through the country around the "Hub." "Winter Wheeling," giving Karl Kron's experiences while riding four hundred miles during the past winter. "The Choice of a Tricycle," practical hints on the construction of three-wheelers, and "The Bicycle Co-efficient of Safety," a scientific discussion and demonstration of various points connected with curve-riding and tensile strength, are of especial interest to wheelmen. The editorial on the "Utility of the Bicycle for Public Service," is worthy of careful reading. This number is particularly full of wheel news, and contains many interesting items of bicycling in France, England, Germany, New Zealand and other foreign countries.

The steamer Empire State is being rejuvenated for the coming season. More improvements are being made at present than have heretofore been attempted for any summer's business The boilers have been retubed and the entire machinery overhauled. For the comfort and pleasure of excursionists, the Empire State has been made more roomy in accommodations and more airy in convenience. A new saloon deck has been added. The old saloon has been torn out, and a new one, double in height and width of that of of the old, has been built. Nearly $20,000 has been expended in the repairs. The Empire State will run from the same pier as last year, Battery wharf, with Capt. J. M. Phillips, the old, well-known and popular commander, still in charge. Harry M'Glenen continues as business agent, while E. Burt Phillips remains the general business manager. The first trip will probably be made on the Seventeenth of June, and the season be permanently opened during the last part of the month.

Ladies visiting Boston will find great additions and improvements in the well known store of Wm. S. Butler & Co., on Tremont Street. The Boston Journal says: "To the old store has been added that at the corner of Montgomery Place, and this joined to the old, makes for business purposes a salesroom on the first floor of double the former size; while on the second floor are large business rooms; on the third floor ladies' reception room, counting room, etc.; and above this, two other floors for the wholesale trade of the establishment, besides a large dining room for the help in the establishment. An elevator and electric lights are also included, The new appearance of the premises was a surprise to visitors at the grand opening, all of whom expressed themselves as well pleased.

TO OWNERS OR KEEPERS OF DOGS.

Extracts from Chapter 102 of Public Statutes:

SECT. 80. Every owner or keeper of a dog of three months old or over shall annually, on or before the thirtieth day of April, cause it to be registered, numbered, described, and licensed for one year from the first day of the ensuing May, in the office of the clerk of the city or town wherein said dog is kept, and shall cause it to wear around its neck a collar distinctly marked with its owner's name and its registered number.

SECT. 81. An owner of a dog may at any time have it licensed until the first day of the ensuing May; and a person becoming the owner or keeper of a dog after the first day of May, not duly licensed, shall cause it to be numbered, described and licensed as provided in the preceding section.

SECT. 82. The fee for every license shall be two dollars for a male dog, and five dollars for a female dog.

SECT. 87. Whoever keeps a dog contrary to the provisions of this chapter shall forfeit fifteen dollars, five dollars of which shall be paid to the complainant, and ten dollars to the treasurer of the county in which the dog is kept.

SECT. 90. The mayor of each city and the chairman of the selectmen of each town shall annually, within ten days from the first day of July, issue a warrant to one or more police officers or constables, directing them to proceed forthwith to kill or cause to be killed all dogs within such city or town not licensed and collared according to the provisions of this chapter, and to enter complaint against the owners or keepers thereof; and any person may, and every police officer and constable shall, kill or cause to be killed all such dogs wherever or wherever found.

IMPERATIVE ORDERS FROM HEADQUARTERS

TO SELL ALL SURPLUS LOTS OF DARK AND LIGHT COLORED SPRING SUITS.

THE GREAT SALE has commenced at all of our combination of 21 Stores, from the Mammoth "Marlboro," in Boston all along the line. REMEMBER. Prices the same in all our stores, from Connecticut to Maine. No matter Who advertises low prices, we agree to Undersell every competitor in North America. Among the combined stocks of $1,500,000, we claim MORE good, desirable garments to offer THE RETAIL TRADE, than was ever before shown by any Clothing firm in the UNITED STATES. The goods are to be sold—our LOW PRICES will certainly accomplish it. Read every word of this advertisement.

Grand Exposition by the Manufacturers!

Spring and Summer Clothing for the Million by the Great Clothiers of New England.

FRIDAY, APRIL 27, we shall inaugurate our 5th Great Annual Spring and Summer Opening of Fine and Medium Clothing for Men's, Young Men's, Boys' and Children's wear, and Gents' Furnishing Goods. We propose to make this opening one that will rival anything of the kind ever before attempted by any Clothier in the United States. We are the Largest Manufacturing Retail Dealers in New England. Headquarters, Manufactory, and Wholesale Rooms, 395, 397, 399, 401, 403 Washington Street, Boston. Our Branch Stores are located in the Principal Cities of New England. We have a Stock of $1,500,000 to draw our supplies from.

With the above stock we will guarantee to undersell all competitors from 25 to 40 per cent, no matter who they are or where they do business. We have done it in the past and shall continue to do it. It is a well-known fact that while some of our competitors have labored hard to capture the Clothing trade, by offering worthless goods to the public, and have been so badly defeated, We have constantly endeavored to keep our goods up to their original standard and by so doing have very largely increased our trade, during the past year. The "NAUMKEAG" understands the wants of the citizens of Essex County. They need no WATCHING neither does the "Naumkeag." REMEMBER! Our Store is nearly twice as large as any other Clothing Establishment in Salem. We carry four (4) times the stock and ten (10) times as many styles. Store Lighted every evening bp nine (9) Arc Electric Lights. We are now prepared to show the Largest stock, the Greatest Variety, the Finest Assortment, the Handsomest Patterns and by far the Most Desirable and Attractive Styles ever offered in Salem or New England, and at Prices within the reach of all.

Glass shingles are now being made in Pittsburg. They're very handy for a mother, as she can see through the shingle and note just how much redder the boy has been made.—Post.

A stand fell down with a crash,
A number of men it did mash,
But the entire ten
Were soon well again—
St. Jacobs Oil cured every gash.

A baker who lives in Duluth,
Went crazy one night with a tooth,
He rubbed the gum boil
With St Jacobs Oil,
It cured him, and this is the truth.

"How beautiful these fields of grain are," said she, as she leaned heavily on his shoulder in the carriage. "Yes, very beautiful. Those are fields of rye." "Oh! Is that the way that delicious rock and rye I took for a cold last winter grows?" And they rode right along beneath the trees and by the fields, he in mute admiration at her innocence, and she more than ever pleased with the marvels of nature.—New Haven Register.

A Miss Buchanan, once rallying a brave soldier on his courage said: "Now, Captain Johnson, do you really mean to tell me you can walk up to the cannon's mouth without fear?" "Yes," was the prompt reply, "or a Buchanan's either," and he did it. It may be safely assumed that the lady, to whom the gallant Captain thus paid his respects, hadn't the catarrh. This malady is as loathsome as it is painful. It's cure has heretofore been considered impossible. Ely's Cream Balm, however, never fails to cure it. Mr. Nathan Fegley, with E. F. Montz, Merchant, Wilkesbarre, Pa., says: "I've had catarrh for 15 years. Ely's Cream Balm has opened my nostrils and reduced the inflammation. My eyes, too, can stand strong light." This balm is a marvel of fragrance, and curative powers—is not a liquid or snuff, and is easily applied.

"Your future husband seems very exacting, he has been stipulating for all sorts of things," said a mother to her daughter, who was about getting married. "Never mind, mamma," said the affectionate girl, who was already dressed for the wedding, "these are his last wishes."—Hartford Times.

Here is a warning to men too close-fisted to advertise: "One of this description wanted to sell some land; so he put a written notice in one of the hotels the other day. A man who was inquiring for a small farm was referred to the written notice, when he replied: 'I can't buy land of any man who does his advertising in this way. He'd steal the fence, the pump handle, and the barn doors before he'd give up possession.'"—Ex.

A VEXED CLERGYMAN.

Even the patience of Job would become exhausted were he a preacher and endeavoring to interest his audience while they were keeping up an incessant coughing making it impossible for him to be heard. Yet, how very easy can all this be avoided by simply using Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. Trial Bottles given away at Hazen A. Spaulding's Drug Store.

A young man married the daughter of his boarding-house mistress at Fort Worth, Tex., with no understanding as to his future relations with the house. At the end of a week, the landlady presented a bill for both himself and wife. He had expected to be boarded free, and he refused to settle. On returning from a theatre with his bride, he found the doors locked and their effects piled on the sidewalk.

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

At the 43d annual meeting of the Massachusetss Homœopathic Medical Society, held in Boston last week, Dr. Lewis Whiting of Danvers was elected one of the Censors. Dr. H. E. Spalding of Hingham was chosen President.

Coal has dropped a dollar and a half a ton, on some kinds. That's just the way, a big reduction just as people are beginning to get through using it.

One of our builders is of the opinion that the prospect for new buildings is as good as last season, and there will probably be much more activity in this line.

Have you bought your carpet yet? If not, don't wait another week. Morrill & Bowen, the carpet men, have an elegant stock to show you and sell you cheap.

A letter has been received from W. P. Chipman, of Davisville, R. I., accepting the call of the Baptist church in this town, commencing the first of July, next.

Alfred Henderson, of Salem, met with a "header" while coming down Chestnut street, last Thursday, and one tooth was knocked out, and his face scratched.

Mrs. M. O. Stevens delivered a temperance address at Odd Fellows' Hall, Beverly, last Sunday evening, under the auspices of the Beverly Temperance Association.

A party of six Hibernians right from the "ould sod," have recently arrived in town, and were looking for a job.—They struck the right town; there's plenty of room.

It is said that ice will be high this year, notwithstanding the great quantity. The reason is that it is so thick it cost a good deal to cut it. Those horrid ice men.

A little boy named Keefe, while playing on Main street last Monday evening, fell against the steps leading to Distin & Howley's shop, and his head was severely cut.

Miss Abbie F. Nichols, principal of Endicott school, Salem, will spend the summer travelling in Europe. She goes out to meet Mrs. Elijah Upton and daughter of Peabody.

A flock of geese passed over the town the other day, and it is said one of our would-be sportsmen followed them for five hours and returned with "nary goose!" What a goose.

Notices have been posted reminding owners of dogs that said canines must be numbered and registered in the office of the town clerk, before the expiration of the present month.

A strolling minstrel, whose whitened locks would indicate he had passed the appointed age of man, fiddled and sang some of the popular airs on the street Saturday, and had a full house.

Charlie Whiting, living on Aborn street, was chopping wood last Friday, when the ax slipped and inflicted a painful, though not serious, wound between the fingers of the left hand.

Peter Hogan, civil engineer, formerly of Peabody, is now in the employ of the State of New York, superintending the erection of a dam and reservoir at the Peekskill military encampment.

The Beverly Citizen says: Mrs. Minnie (Smith) Tigh of Salem, has been engaged to sing in the choir at St. Mary's Church, much to the gratification of her many appreciative friends.

An association of young men, calling themselves the Farragut Associates, will hold a social dance at Upton's Hall next Monday evening (May eve).—Quite a number of tickets are already sold.

The Selectmen have an eye to the beautiful, and as a preliminary step in that direction, have had two more of the trees removed from the new town house lot. The work was done last Saturday.

The Naturalization Rooms, the Peabody Mutual Benefit Rooms and the branch office of the Salem Post, have been consolidated, and are now under the charge of "Jimmy" Thomas, in Allen's Block.

Mr. John F. Moreland has had the splinters that have bound his broken arm removed during the week, and has partially recovered the use of his arm—so far, at least, as to be able to work his fingers a little.

Last Saturday, the Selectmen re-appointed the old board of engineers of the fire department, viz.: D. S. Littlefield, Charles G. Folsom, D. B. Lord, William W. Reed, George O. Peirce. The board will meet to organize to-morrow (Thursday) evening. Mr. D. S. Littlefield, the present chief, has been a member of the department thirty-nine years.

"G. S." Cigars—all the rage—nothing like them—at George Stevens'.

The appearance of the old Lexington monument is much improved since the alterations, and the job is a creditable one to Mr. Samuel Brown, who did it.

Mr. Thomas E. Wilson, the machinist, has the contract to refit and furnish the old Dodge grist mill at Beverly, which has been bought by the Boston Rubber Company.

At a meeting of the Firemen's Relief Association Fair Committee, it was voted to leave the money on deposit the rest of the year, which ends in about three weeks. The sum realized on the recent fair was $2,018.44.

April is in decidedly chilly mood just now, but the rains are doing much to help along the departure of the frost from the ground and the settling of the soil, so that the season promises to be not so very late, after all.

As a man employed on the new street railroad was handling an iron bar last Saturday, it sprang back with such force as to take all the buttons from his vest. Had he been a little nearer, the result must have been serious.

Warren Wilson, Jr., drew the diamond ring and D. P. Grosvenor the gossamer coat or cloak, at the Cadet Band concert last Monday evening. Wm. Blaney and Geo. S. Brimmer were on the committee on drawing.

The Lynn Transcript says: M. E. Tucker, the well-known furniture dealer, will erect a fine two-and-one-half story house in Peabody, containing twelve rooms. The house will be built on the line of the new Horse Railroad, and will be an ornament to the place.

As we go to press we learn of the capture of the robbers who stole the diamonds of Cal. Wagner, of the Barlow & Wilson troupe at Mechanic Hall recently. Two men named Wm. Donahue and Wm. Ahern committed the robbery, and confessed and restored the property.

The G. A. R. posts of the state have been supplied with subscription cards, and each member is asked to solicit subscriptions to the amount of 10 cents from each person, to help support the Soldiers' Home, in Chelsea, the coming year. It would seem as if this sum could be easily raised thus.

Mr. Daniel Murphy, who injured his finger so badly a short time ago, while at work on a cellar on Fulton street, that it had to be amputated, died of lockjaw last Saturday morning. Mr. Murphy was well known, having been employed by Mr. Samuel Trask and Alfred Berry for many years.

Local sportsmen are freely discussing the merits of Hanlan and Kennedy, who are to row for $5,000 at the Point of Pines on Decoration day, and doubtless there will be hundreds of our citizens attend the race. The oarsmen were wise in selecting such a desirable place to hold the contest.

We regret to be compelled to chronicle the sudden decease of Master Eddie, son of Frank E. Farnham, which took place last Friday morning, of peritonitis. The lad had hardly recovered from the measles, when this disease set in. Mr. and Mrs. Farnham have the sympathy of our entire community in their affliction.

The universal favorite, Denman Thompson, is booked for an engagement at Peabody Institute, Thursday evening, May 3rd, at which time he will appear in his world-famous creation of Joshua Whitcomb. The old New England farmer grows more popular as he grows older, and with his natural ways and quaint sayings, an evening passed in his society is most delightfully refreshing. The company includes Miss Julia Wilson as Little Dot, Ignacio Martinnetti as the street Arab, and others.

As one of the workmen employed by D. A. & F. H. Caskin, was driving around the corner of the South Church, he accidentally struck the post on the corner, throwing the driver out on his face, but fortunately not injuring him. The shaft and whiffle tree being broken, the horse jumped from the wagon to one side, and but for the patent hitch strap on the horse, he would have been badly injured. He escaped with a few cuts. The team was taken to Symonds' stable and cared for.

The sixty-fourth anniversary of Odd Fellowship in America, was celebrated with a banquet at Upton's Hall last evening, by Holten Lodge 104 of this town. Essex and Fraternity Lodges of Salem, and Danvers Lodge of Danvers, were present, and participated in the pleasant occasion. At an early hour Masonic Hall was more than comfortably filled with the members of the secret order, and after the customary work, remarks on the "good of the order" were heard from a large number of visiting brothers, and were continued with slight intermission until the banquet was announced at about 10 o'clock. The company then visited Upton's Hall where the committee had provided a bountiful collation. Some three hundred plates had been spread, and the bill of fare was a good one. After its liberal discussion, the company broke up, all being satisfied with the good time they had enjoyed.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

Grand Army matters continue to be the subject of discussion by the public. There are various opinions and rumors current, but we gather nothing definite. So far as they go these tend towards a speedy settlement of the matter. In this connection the following extract from a letter received by a person in this town, mailed from Denver, April 18th, by Mr. Spofford, will be of interest. "I See by a publication of the Associated Press of Boston, that I am published all over the country. That I am short in my accounts $1500, and this is an absolute falsehood." Will you please have it corrected. There is nothing in Post 50 accounts but what is correct." Since the above was in type, we learn that Mr. Spofford has arrived in Washington and is detained there sick. His wife left to-day for that city. The members of the Post decline to make any statement, but it is generally reported that there is a sum on deposit in Boston to the credit of the Post, sufficient to make it good.

We regret to announce the decease of Rev. Daniel Wait, formerly pastor of the Methodist church in this town, and well known to most of our readers. This sad event occurred last Sabbath, at his home in Brookfield, where he had been stationed by the Conference of his church. He celebrated his golden wedding during the late session of the Conference, and congratulations were sent to him by that body. Later on he appeared at the Conference and in his usual health. It will be remembered that he was troubled while here with his lungs, and his death was caused by pneumonia. His father died about a year ago. Rev. Mr. Wait's age was 70. This was his third year of appointment at Brookfield.

Not many of those who purchase their medical supplies at the drug store in Sweetser's Block are aware that the unassuming gentleman who waits upon them is a political writer of large ability. Such is the case, however. Dr. Dix is the writer of the work entitled, "The American State and American Statesmen," a production that elicited warm praise, at the time of its publication, from a reviewer in one of the British quarterlies. A quarter century or more ago, the scholarly doctor was a member of the United States Embassy at Ecuador. His reminiscences of South American life are extremely entertaining.—Gazette Correspondent.

Miss Kate L. Barrows, assistant teacher in the Peabody High School, has resigned to take effect with the close of this week. This is Miss Barrows' seventh year of service in the school, having taught previously at Watertown, Mass. It is understood that the committee have already many applications for the position to be vacant, but no action will be taken until the return of the chairman, Rev. Mr. Hudson.

About six o'clock last Sunday evening a man in a helpless state of intoxication was lying in the tan yard near the corner of Wallis and Walnut streets, while three or four of his companions, who were a little better off, staggered away and left him: Slowly and sadly they laid him down, from the field of his fame fresh and gory. They carved not a line, they raised not a stone, but left him alone in his glory.

It will be noted that the members of the Unity Club are to renew the custom with that Society of giving a May breakfast, and they will also supplement it by an Apron Sale during the afternoon and evening, and an exhibition of Mrs. Jarley's figures. Ice cream will also be served in the evening. Breakfast from 6.30 to 9 A. M. Supper from 6 to 8 P. M. See advertisement in another column.

The marriage of Mr. R. Henry Wilkinson and Miss Eliza Poor, took place at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. Nathan H. Poor, on Stevens street, last Wednesday evening, Rev. W. G. Sperry of the Congregational Church, performing the marriage ceremony. They were the recipients of many congratulations and valuable presents. They will reside on Tremont street.

A very enjoyable meeting of the Unity Club was held last Monday evening at the residence of William H. Brown, the members being conveyed thither in Quint's barges. It is understood that but one more meeting of the club will be held this season.

Mr. H. F. Lawrence has an advertisement in another column. He makes a specialty of repairing and making over old furniture, besides custom work of all kinds. He has a large line of samples of coverings for furniture which he is pleased to show customers.

Mr. John Frost while attempting to throw a belt on to a pulley at his factory, recently, with a tanner's hook, accidentally lost his hold on the hook, and it fell, striking the point of the hook in his leg, making an ugly wound.

SOUTH PEABODY.—The Annual Church and Society meetings were held last Wednesday evening. The following persons were elected officers of the Rockville Cong. Society, for the ensuing year: Clerk, C. F. Shillaber; Treasurer, W. Eugene Reed; Standing Committee, Wm. Tudbury, Lewis Brown, Wm. F. Wiggin; Auditors, Lewis Brown, C. F. Shillaber.

Prof. Churchill's Readings added $25.13 to the building fund.

The contractors have been requested to discontinue work on the church, after finishing the vestibule, as the subscription fund will then be exhausted.

What are now especially needed—a good bell, aud a Sabbath morning service.

A Sabbath School Concert last Sunday evening, filled the vestry, and proved a very pleasing and instructive Service. We hope that it will be a regular monthly institution here as in former years.

Some of our school-boys are shockingly profane. Their habit of throwing stones at each other is a most pernicious one.

It is hoped that those among us who keep hens, will be careful not to let them trespass on the property of their neighbors. There are some who apparently care nothing about such an abuse. What is there, however, excepting hogs, which can give such a filthy, woebegone aspect to a place, as a lot of scratching hens? We commend this subject to the thoughtful attention of some of the people here, who are accustomed to let their fowls run loose.

Mr. M. E. Tucker is going to erect a two and a half story house on the land of Mrs. Robert Murray on Lynn street, the lower part to be used as a store, and the upper part for a tenement house.

The Lynn and Boston R. R. Co., have the tracks laid as far as the surveyor is, widening the road at S. K. Newhall's.

Mr. I. H. Beede has made extensive improvements in and around the Bennett House, occupied by G. W. Davis.

Chas. R. Newhall, while digging gravel in the hill above S. K. Newhall's, dug out an Indian pestle, about a foot in length.

Miss Jessie Craig is visiting friends in Keene, N. H.

Dr. Perley of South Lynnfield, was buried here last Sunday.

John Murphy has commenced the work of demolishing the old Naumkeag House.

Wm. Hayes is tearing down the old sheds, and taking the trees out by the roots, on the Harvey Galeucia estate, recently purchased by him.

Mr. Geo. J. Parker lost a valuable cow last Saturday, making two that he has lost in three years. She was taken sick about eleven o'clock and died at four in the afternoon.

Wm. H. Richardson is having a large henery built for him, in the rear of his stable on Lynn St.

Information is wanted concerning the parties who threw two bundles of laths of Daniel Haskell's on the sidewalk, and into the street, last Friday night, and committed other depredations.

We were pleased to receive a supply of Southern papers, and a note from Dr. C. C. Pike, during the week. The Doctors health at the time of writing was improving, although he had not as yet regained his voice, although he expected to before his return home, which will probably be the latter part of this week. He reports the weather delightful and as warm as June.

A gravel train that was used for filling the dump at Salem last summer, was again put on the So. Reading Branch last week. They haul through two trains a day, consisting of thirty cars each. The cars are loaded by a patent steam shovel, which takes a minute to a car. Some twenty-five men are employed.

Monday morning, April 16, as the train containing Messrs. Milo McNeil and Clarence Hammond of this town, was leaving Minneapolis, Minn., two cars on the train jumped the track and fell on their side, and several persons were injured. Fortunately, however, for our young friends, they were on the cars that remained on the track.

Mr. Geo. O. P. Wilson, for the past nine years in the employ of Mr. J. J Heylingberg, will go on the road next week selling Yankee notions and barber's supplies. Mr. W. is out of health by close confinement to the shop, and takes this method of regaining it. We wish him success.

The Exchange News Room has been furnished with a new billiard table of improved make, during the week, and it is a credit to the committee who selected it and an ornament to the room.

Quite a number of G. A. R. boys visited the "war song" entertainment, at Tremont Temple, Boston, last Thursday evening.

Mr. Henry O. Upton's day class in dancing, give a reception at Upton's Hall, Wednesday evening, May 2.—Thanks for favors.

OPENING.

WM. S. BUTLER & CO.

Take pleasure in announcing that the alterations in their store are now completed, and that they are occupying Nos. 90, 92, 94, 96, and 98 Tremont Street, and 1 and 2 Montgomery Place.

The second floor is now also open for business, and on the third floor is a Ladies' Reception Room, where every attention will be given to the comfort of our customers.

These alterations will give us much-needed additional room for the display of our stock, and will afford to the ladies Better Accommodations and Light than are found in any other store in our line.

FIRST

OPENING

— OF OUR —

TRIMMED MILLINERY

DEPARTMENT.

In order to place this department at once in rank with any first-class millinery establishment, we have secured the best talent to be had to give our Hats that beauty and elegance which is consistent with refined taste, at popular prices to suit all trade.

The success of such a department has never been tried in this city, a department where STYLISH TRIMMED HATS are sold at but small advance on the cost of hat and trimmings, and we trust that the ladies of Boston and vicinity will avail themselves of the opportunity to leave their orders early, so they can receive proper attention.

OPENING

— OF OUR —

COTTON UNDERWEAR DEP'T.

In order to place this department properly before the public, we shall offer at less than cost our inaugurating sale, as follows:—

Lot 1. Chemises, Drawers, Corset Covers, for Ladies and Children, at 25c. each.

Lot 2. Chemises, Drawers, Skirts, Night Dresses, Hamburg trimmed, at 50c each.

Lot 3. The same, at 75c.

Lot 4. The same, at $1.00.

We refrain from giving a description of each and every article, and prefer giving good cloth and good trimmings to advertising the different clusters of tucks etc., and showing a poor article.

We hope ladies will avail themselves of this sale, as we shall not feel able to continue it for any length of time.

OPENING

— OF OUR —

STRAW GOODS

DEPARTMENT.

This department has been placed at the rear part of our store, and has been made the most attractive place in Boston.

The department faces a sheet of mirror, 50 feet in length and 9 feet in height, so as to give every opportunity to the purchaser to see at a glance whether a hat is becoming or otherwise.

The following New Shapes will be offered at our opening: The Critic, Fedora, Iolanthe, Mignon, Poppy, Patti, Thursby, Nautilus, Casino, Sprite, Marquise, Servia, and many others.

Horse Cars pass our door from all railroad stations, a great convenience to our out-of-town patrons.

After Long and Weary Waiting Relief is Brought to those who Need it.
"Well, Pat," said an Orange county Physician to a complaining Irish patient some years ago, "for that pain in your chest you had better go home and put on a mustard plaster. I can't think this minute of anything better. And by the way," added the doctor turning to a friend, "I wish somebody would invent a real good plaster—something actually helpful for such cases as Pat's. Maybe they will sometime, when its too late for me to use it."
When BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER was placed on the market about ten years ago the doctor's hope became a fact. Because of the rare medicinal virtues inherent in it, its rapid action and sure results, the Capcine is fast displacing the slow-acting plasters of former days, for all affections to which a plaster is ever applicable. Price 25 cents. In the middle of the genuine is cut the word CAPCINE.

Miscellaneous.

[From the Boston Herald of Feb. 6, 1883.]

The English Sparrow.
SHALL HE LIVE OR DIE?

To the Editor of the Herald: A bill is now before our Legislature to outlaw the English sparrow. It is intended to exterminate the myriads of little brown-backed scavengers that work so busily summer and winter, from morning until night, in almost every street of our cities and larger towns, eating every decaying animal and vegetable substance that would otherwise pollute the air we breathe. If it passes, then, through the coming spring and summer, we are to hear all over this commonwealth the freqnent explosion of fire-arms. A hundred thousand sparrows, it may be, will be slaughtered, and, doubtless, with them many other birds; for when hoodlums get at it with shot-guns, there is no knowing where they will stop. Our song birds are now being most seriously endangered by boys who are taught to make collections, and by men who find ready use and sale for their beautiful plumage. Now, although nobody has ever paid me anything for doing it, I have deemed it, during many years, my duty and a privilege, in the absence of abler pens and voices, to speak, in times of trouble and danger to the lower creatures, a few words in behalf of those that have no power to speak for themselves, and the press has almost uniformly and most generously permitted me to speak through its columns.

What can I say for the English sparrow? First, that it is not the English sparrow at all, but a bird, as I find, that abounds throughout Europe, from Siberia to Africa and India, and which has abounded since the earliest history. In the 10th chapter of Matthew I find Christ saying, 1800 years ago: "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall to the ground without your Father." And in the 84th Psalm, which was written nearly or quite 3000 years ago, I find these words: "Yea, the sparrow hath found a house and the swallow a nest for herself where she may lay her young, even thine altars, O Lord of hosts, my King and my God." Three thousand years ago, then, sparrows were common. Now what, as their advocate, can I say for them? First, that it is fair to presume that they were created by the Almighty for some useful purpose. Second, that they are to be presumed innocent until proved guilty. If there is any doubt in regard to the evidence, they are entitled to the benefit of that doubt. Now I turn to most excellent authority, Chambers' Encyclopædia, and what do I find? First, that they eat all animal as well as vegetable substances, and so are among the best of scavengers. Second, "During summer vast numbers of insects and their larvæ are devoured by sparrows, and in this way they make amends for their plunder of grain in autumn." Third, "The destruction of sparrows in France was followed by an increase of caterpillars, vastly more injurious to crops than sparrows." Fourth, another authority: At the New England agricultural fair of 1872, a prize was offered by the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, for the best essay on "Insect Eating Birds." The prize was won by Frank H. Palmer of Massachusetts, and this is one of the first things found in his essay: "Dr. Bradley says that a pair of sparrows will destroy more than 3000 caterpillars in a week." Fifth, in the history of Frederick the Great, it is related that, that monarch once ordered all the sparrows in his gardens to be destroyed, because they ate some of his cherries, and the next year he had scarcely a cherry in his gardens, and the trees were covered with insects. Sixth, I find that we brought them to this country to kill the worms that were then ruining the shade trees in our cities, and they did kill them! In Philadelphia I am quite sure they were a great success. In Boston they did most valuable service, as you will find from a communication to your paper some years ago by Dr. Thomas M. Brewer, and in New York their fame and prowess were sung by William Cullen Bryant in his beautiful poem entitled, "The Old World Sparrow." Like other birds, they doubtless eat, on farms and in gardens, some of the grain and fruits they helped to raise and protect. Why shouldn't they? An Englishman going down the Nile on a boat loaded with grain asked the Egyptian captain why he permitted the pigeons to come from every village and eat the grain on the deck. "Did God make the pigeons?" said the Egyptian. "Yes." "Is grain their natural food?" "Yes." "Can they sow and reap to get it?" "No." "Was it not clearly God's intention, then, that they should take it where they could find it?" "Yes." "Then let them eat and be satisfied. The earth is the Lord's and the abundance thereof, and he has provided enough for all." Are we less merciful than the Egyptians? If so, then it is high time to start "Bands of Mercy." In Norway it is a custom, I am told, on the day before Christmas to put out sheaves of wheat for the sparrows. Shall we teach the children of Massachusetts to put out only shotguns for them? The people of this commonwealth can afford to plant and sow a few more acres, if need be, that there may be enough for both the birds and us. But, if God cares for the sparrow that falleth not to the ground without His knowledge, we cannot afford to enact laws that will do the sparrow injustice. I claim that it is not the sparrows, but the shotguns, that are thinning out our birds of more beautiful plumage, and ask that the world's testimony on this subject through the centuries be carefully examined before we decide that the Almighty has made a mistake in giving us these little brown-backed birds, that are so busy in every street, and come so trustfully about our homes these cold winter days when all other birds have left us.

GEORGE T. ANGELL.

From an article on the European sparrow, by Dr. Hagen of Harvard University, in the "American Agriculturist," I make the following extracts:

"The sparrow literature is large, and opinions during the past century have considerably changed, until the final decision is most decidedly favorable to its value."

"I consider the sparrow to be a valuable addition to the native birds, and most certainly beneficial for both horticulturists and farmers."

And I append the following strong testimony:

[From the Boston Transcript.]

THE SPARROW VINDICATED.

A more thoroughly competent witness than Mr. John Galvin, our city forester, on the sparrow question, cannot well be imagined.

City Hall, Boston
April 23, 1877.

Dr. Thomas M. Brewer,

Dear Sir:—I am perfectly willing to answer all your questions frankly and fully. You are right in supposing that I am and have been familiar with the habits of the sparrows, even before their introduction. Since their coming to Boston my duties and those of my men have given us constant opportunities to notice what they do. Their introduction into Boston was immediately attended with great benefit, almost beyond all calculation. The trees on the common were infested with a nasty yellow caterpillar, which destroyed the leaves and buds of the elms and other trees; and these insects increased very rapidly, in spite of all that my men could do to destroy them. And, at the South End, the Elm trees were eaten every June by swarms of canker-worms. Both of these pests have been pretty nearly exterminated, and the trees, many of which would otherwise have died, have been saved.

The sparrow is still of great use. But for it these insects would return. And other pests would attack the trees. Last spring, (1876,) the buds of many of the larger elms, as they were opening, were attacked by a great many of a small kind of lice. The sparrows soon found them out and ate them greedily. Consequently the foliage, instead of drying up, as it would have done but for the sparrows, was never finer. My men could do nothing. They had no wings like the sparrow, who could cling to the buds and clean them one by one. Yet for all the good the sparrows were doing there were some, so prejudiced against them, and who can see no good but only harm in everything they do, who raised a hue and cry that the sparrows were eating the buds! Instead of that they were eating the bud-eaters; but instead of being thanked for the good they were doing, they were only abused. I believe that the wages of all my men would not compensate Boston for the loss of the sparrows.

In answer to your third question, I say without hesitation, the sparrows do not molest or interfere with any other bird. They do not trouble the robin or bluebird, or manifest any animosity against either. All summer long they are together, and it would be impossible for this to be done without my men or myself noticing it, yet I never witnessed anything of the kind.

I have not noticed any decrease in the numbers of any kind of bird, but on the contrary, a very marked increase of various kinds. The robins were more numerous on the Common last summer than ever before. The little chip-sparrow has become very numerous, and seems to be very fond of the sparrow, often feeding on the same bit of bread. The small martins have very greatly increased in numbers on account of the number of boxes. These they take possession of whenever they want one, and drive the sparrows away. Before the sparrows came there were no bluebirds at all. Now they are becoming quite common, and often treat the sparrows very badly, taking away from them their own boxes, and breaking up their nests. The sparrows of course show fight, but the bluebirds are always too strong for them. The writer in the Advertiser, in my opinion, is all wrong.

JOHN GALVIN, Supt.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN BOSS.
How to Promote Personal Power—A New Radical Reformer.

"There is no provision in the Divine economy for political bosses!"

With a bang of his fist, and in the voice of a man who had made up his mind on the subject, Rev. James Chambers of Calvary Presbyterian Church, Harlem, recently opened his sermon with this announcement. He was right. The only boss authorized by the Book is mentioned in these words: "He who ruleth his own spirit is greater than he who taketh a city."

Commonly, the better side of men is subject to the despotism of the worse side. Bad passions, bad humors, mean jealousies and base revenges are all bosses. One of the worst of bosses is bile. What is most depressing in philosophical or theological thought is due to it. Old General Debility is another tyrannical boss. He lashes men who are naturally bad or miserably weak.

Concerning his deliverance from this bondage, Rev. S. P. Lewis, pastor of the Eighth Street Baptist Church, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "I was suffering from exhaustion and general debility. As an invigorant I used PARKER'S GINGER TONIC. I never met with anything so effective It is an elegant family medicine. I take a bottle in my valise when I go on my annual vacations."

PARKER'S GINGER TONIC neither intoxicates nor promotes a desire for strong drinks. The most pronounced temperance people use and praise it for this reason alone. It cures Malarial Fevers, Consumption, Rheumatism, and all diseases of the Blood. Also weaknesses peculiar to women Its action is prompt and pervasive. Test it once, and you will adopt it as a home remedy. Prices, 50 cents and $1 a bottle. Hiscox & Co., Chemists, New York.

The best thing out for removing Dandruff is
HEYLINGBERG'S
EUREKA DANDRUFF REMOVER.
It has been thoroughly tested by hundreds of gentlemen, Ladies, and Children, and we have plenty of testimonials of its good results. It is cooling, removes Dandruff, invigorates the roots of the hair, and will quickly produce a strong and beautiful growth in all cases where the roots of the hair are not fully dead, and will stop this unpleasant itching; in fact it is the best hair dressing in use. It is not greasy or sticky, and is warranted free of all oils, and poisins, and will prove the cleanest, safest and most economical Hair Dressing to be found.
Peabody, Mass., Nov. 18, 1881.
Mr. J. J. Heylingberg. Dear Sir:—Both myself and wife have used your Eureka Dandruff Remover for some time, with the most satisfactory results, and recommend it as being indispensable for the toilet. Yours truly,

A GOOD ODD FELLOW.

Mr. Cutler, of 21 Lyons St., New Haven, Conn.—How He takes Life Easy now and how He Obtained the Means to Regain his Health.

"Mr. Cutler, of 21 Lyons St., is a faithful Odd Fellow, and for forty years a member of Quinipiac Lodge No. 1 (the oldest organization of its kind in the State of Conn.) He is a man much respected in New Haven. Your reporter found him at his pleasant home on Lyons street one afternoon, taking life easy. "You see," he says, "I'm trying to make myself feel a little indisposed. I presume its the lingering results of a Lodge dinner which I attended a while ago down at the beach. I have been, as many of my friends in New Haven know, a sufferer for years from indigestion and biliousness. When I have indulged in too hearty food I've had to suffer at times extremely. As a result I've had to place myself under my physician's care often, and I have taken a great many remedies, but I find after a thorough trial that Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is the most excellent medicine I have ever had knowledge of for any of the disorders above mentioned. It leaves no exhaustive effects, but rather strengthens and regulates the digestive organs in a charming manner. We keep it as a household medicine, and I have recommended it to my friends, for it is an excellent preparation."

Mr. Cutler is a man whose word can be depended upon. His testimony is but a re-echo of the words of thousands in New England who have received relief from the sole use of Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY.

PROBATE NOTICE.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Essex ss. Probate Court.

To all Persons interested in the Estate of GEORGE UPTON, late of Peabody, in said county, glue manufacturer, deceased, GREETING:

Whereas, King Upton, of Salem, in said county, named as an executor in the last will and testament of said deceased, heretofore proved, has presented to said Court his petition praying that letters testamentary may be issued to him jointly with Marian C. Upton, and Henry Wardwell, the other executors therein named, and that he may be exempt from giving a surety or sureties on his bond, for the reasons alleged in said petition.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Salem, in said county of Essex, on the first Monday of May, next, at nine o'clock, before noon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.

And said King Upton is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper, called the Peabody Press, printed at Peabody, the last publication to be two days at least before said Court.

Witness, George F. Choate, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this sixteenth day of April, in he year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three. J. T. Mahoney, Register.

MORTGAGEE'S SALE.

By virtue of a power of sale contained in a certain mortgage deed, given by Edward W. Jacobs, of Peabody, in the County of Essex and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and Eliza W. Jacobs, his wife, in her own right, to James Marsh of Peabody, dated the twenty-eighth day of September, in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight, and recorded with Essex Deeds, South District, Book 1017, Leaf 40; and for breach of condition of said mortgage will be sold at public auction on the premises hereinafter described on THURSDAY the tenth day of May, 1883, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, all and singular, the premises described in said mortgage, namely: A certain parcel of pasture and tillage land situated in said Peabody, bounded thus, viz.: Easterly by land of Jonathan King and Eben King. Northerly by land of said Edward W. Jacobs and Westerly by land of said Edward W. Jacobs, and Southerly by Forest Street, containing twenty-four acres, be the same more or less, being marked and defined as the wall now stands, being the premises that said James Marsh conveyed to said Eliza W. Jacobs by his deed dated March 28th, A. D. 1874.

WHY THE SALESMAN SIGHED.—A patient, quiet young salesman in the men's underwear department in Ridley's store, heaved such a sigh yesterday, that a reporter who stood by inquired what the trouble was.

"Do you see that young lady going away there with her mother?" replied the young salesman, passing a long, thin white hand through a poetic head of hair, and then pointing to a chattering, laughing, daintily dressed young woman who was following an enlarged edition of herself through the crowded store. "Lately married," he added sententiously.

"See, here are forty-eight night shirts that I have had to pull down from the shelves above, open, stretch out and show her, and that I now have to fold up and put away. And ne'er a sale, nor even a thank you. She came to me with her mother, and modestly blushing, asked to see some night shirts.

"Boys'?" I asked.

"No, men's," she replied.

I brought down some fine linen ones, but she said they were too small. Then I climbed up that step ladder and got her numbers 36 to 42. She said the latter were the size.

"Have you any frilled bosoms?" she asked.

I pulled down the latest style in frills.

"Haven't you any of those colored frill shirts, with little pockets?" she continued.

I went to the end of the counter. I climbed up the step ladder and got down three boxes of colored number forty-twos, frilled. She examined each box, pronounced them sweet, priced them, tossed them all about; then she turned to her mother and said:

"Ma, which do you think he would like best, one of these shirts or a silk handkerchief?"

"You know best," answered her mother.

She thought for a moment, and as she trotted off I heard her say, "I guess, ma, I'll buy him a silk handkerchief. He can wear that to church."

"That's so, dear," ma replied, "and he can't wear a colored frill night shirt to church.

"There they go to the silk counter," added the young salesman, as he heaved another sigh from his breast and a shirt box to the shelf overhead.—New York Sun.

IMPROVEMENTS IN STREET CARS.—The progress of invention and the success of recent experiments seem to indicate that the time is soon coming when street cars will not be drawn by horses. A cable line was opened on Saturday last, and electricity appears to have been successfully applied to street cars in London. Experiments are soon to be made with Mr. Daft's electric motor in the streets of Newark. The new cable line in Philadelphia is about a mile long, and it extends from Twenty-third street along Columbia avenue to Fairmount Park. Three cars each went over the route twice, and the speed attained was greater than that of ordinary cars drawn by horses. The endless cable is 9200 feet long and is made of crucible steel. It is kept in motion by two engines, each of 100-horse power. The cable is grasped by what may be called an iron hand under the car, and this hand is opened and its grip relaxed when it becomes necessary to stop the cars. By renewing the grip the car is started, for the cable is always moving. This kind of motive power has been used to propel street cars in San Francisco and Chicago for several years. In London about a month ago, there was a public exhibition of an electric motor for street cars, or tram cars, as they are called there. The accumulator which supplied the propelling force was placed under the seats. It is said that it occupied less than a cubic foot of space and weighed only eighty pounds, although it was sufficiently powerful to propel a loaded car for seven hours at the rate of six miles an hour at only one-quarter of the cost of horse power. It may not be practicable to dispense with horses on some lines, but one can safely predict that the cheapness of electric and other new motors will soon lead street railway capitalists to substitute them for animal power in many places.—Manufacturer's Gazette.

That gentleman, now a member of the legislature of one of the "sovereign states" of this republic, who recently declared with a great show of indignation, that he "did not propose to sell his birthright for an ounce of potash," should devote a little of the time between the sessions to the study of ancient literature upon which our governor drew so heavily in preparing his Fast Day proclamation.

Postmaster-General Gresham has placed D. E. Chamberlin & Co., of Athol, Mass., on the black list of the department.

DARBYS

PROPHYLACTIC FLUID.

A Household Article for Universal Family Use.

Eradicates MALARIA.

For Scarlet and Typhoid Fevers, Diphtheria, Salivation, Ulcerated Sore Throat, Small Pox, Measles, and all Contagious Diseases. Persons waiting on the Sick should use it freely. Scarlet Fever has never been known to spread where the Fluid was used. Yellow Fever has been cured with it after black vomit had taken place. The worst cases of Diphtheria yield to it.

An Antidote for Animal or Vegetable Poisons, Stings, etc.

I used the Fluid during our present affliction with Scarlet Fever with decided advantage. It is indispensable to the sick-room.—WM. F. SANDFORD, Eyrie, Ala.

Scarlet Fever Cured.

Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn.

I testify to the most excellent qualities of Prof. Darbys Prophylactic Fluid. As a disinfectant and detergent it is both theoretically and practically superior to any preparation with which I am acquainted.—N. T. LUPTON, Prof. Chemistry.

Darbys Fluid is Recommended by Hon. ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS, of Georgia; Rev. CHAS. F. DEEMS, D.D., Church of the Strangers, N. Y.; Jos. LECONTE, Columbia, Prof., University, S.C. Rev. A. J. BATTLE, Prof., Mercer University; Rev. GEO. F. PIERCE, Bishop M. E. Church.

INDISPENSABLE TO EVERY HOME. Perfectly harmless. Used internally or externally for Man or Beast.

The Fluid has been thoroughly tested, and we have abundant evidence that it has done everything here claimed. For fuller information get of your Druggist a pamphlet or send to the proprietors,

J. H. ZEILIN & CO., Manufacturing Chemists, PHILADELPHIA.

SMALL-POX and PITTING of Small Pox PREVENTED

A member of my family was taken with Small-pox. I used the Fluid; the patient was not delirious, was not pitted, and was about the house again in three weeks, and no others had it.—J. W. PARKINSON, Philadelphia.

Diphtheria Prevented.

The physicians here use Darbys Fluid very successfully in the treatment of Diphtheria. A. STOLLENWERCK, Greensboro, Ala.

Tetter dried up.
Cholera prevented.
Ulcers purified and healed.
In cases of Death it should be used about the corpse—it will prevent any unpleasant smell.
The eminent Physician, J. MARION SIMS, M. D., New York, says: "I am convinced Prof. Darbys Prophylactic Fluid is a valuable disinfectant."

THE Adjustable Spring Sash-Balance.

PATENTED JULY 16, 1878.

With this device Windows are balanced without the use of weights and cords, and therefore no long boxes on each side of the sash are required. The adjustment to each window according to the weight of its sash and glass by tightening or loosening of its spring is very simple. It is always easy of access to take out for any desirable adjustment, and is applicable to

ANY KIND OF WINDOWS, WHETHER NEW OR OLD STYLE,

Assisting in the opening and holding them at any point to which the lower sash may be raised, or the upper lowered, for the purpose of ventilation and comfort. The general testimony of those whose houses have been supplied with these fixtures for three years is that they are a great convenience, and SATISFACTION IS WARRANTED.

PEABODY.

The Universalist Church was occupied last Sabbath for the first time since its decoration and remodeling. The services were held in the forenoon. Rev. Mr. Sprague preached from Psalms 50:2, "Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, God hath shined." The preacher said that after seven weeks we return to worship in this place which has been altered and improved. He congratulated the congregation that they were back and that the entire building had been renovated within—vestry, parlor and audience room. A new carpet has been added, and the church is in good condition for years to come, and reflects credit upon those who have given of their time and money for its adornment. It is always a commendable object to beautify the house of God. The Jews believed in the adornment of their place of worship in the wilderness. Gold and silver were used to beautify the temple of Solomon. Out of this perfection of beauty God has shined. Adornment is a natural instinct of the human mind. Wordsworth says, "We live by adornment." Every one is a devotee of beauty in some form. We are not entirely human, if insensible to it. It is an emanation, omnipresent as God. The science of esthetics is still in its infancy, but the instinct of beauty is present in every mind. It is a wayside sacrament. We see it in music, poetry and flowers; and thank God for eyes and ears to enjoy it. It is a veritable blessing. To be charmed with the beauty of nature is as natural as it is to breathe. The heavens above us, the land and the sea show forth the symmetry of God's work. God has taught us to love them. How much we are attached to flowers; what pleasure is derived from the horse, cattle and other animals. It is this instinct that lead us to travel in distant lands—to be charmed with nature's works. Standing in some commanding position, between the ground and the heavens, thousands have felt their souls uplifted. Such themes are worthy of the artists' best endeavors. Art is of two kinds, decorative and expressive. Frescoing is a decorative art. Raphael and Michael Angelo left their most enduring effects in this work. By contrast of effect, colors differing from each other are made to blend in harmony. This is true art. As the poet paints in imagery darker lights for contrast, as the architect relieves the heavy masonry with items of exquisite design, and as the musician holds the attention by variation of chords. It is the purpose of architecture to make what is heavy light—to express the grace of natural objects. To do this requires not alone study, but a natural gift. Art, to be elegant, must be true to nature, and not offend the moral sense. It must, however, always be an imitation. It fails to realize on the canvass the sublimity of the most common objects. This love of art and the beautiful is found in every day life. We spare no pains, in the selection of articles of furniture for the house adornments, to obtain the most beautiful. This recognition of beauty as seen in art, has its proper place in religion. It is not piety to disregard it. No one will declare that the ugly shall be considered sacred. The moral and religious life is enlarged by the love of the beautiful. It was worshipped by the Greeks for itself alone, and put above law, morality and justice. Oscar Wilde loved the beautiful, "not wisely but too well." It had not sufficient moral power over him to prevent him from being fleeced at banco. He leaves out the divine element in beauty and carries it to extreme. His words are yet expressive of a great doctrine—too great for one of his calibre. Let us recognize beauty as the expression of a higher power. As a manifestation of God, beauty should be studied and observed. The same God that made man, made the earth, the rivers and the sea. It is man's duty as well as privilege, to enjoy them. It is not wicked to take pleasure in art, in the home decoration or in dress. All have their place in Christianity. A reasonable amount is necessary to refine the religious and social instinct. This church is our Zion, decorated as the Jews did of old. Out of their temple God shone. So may it be here. May God shine not alone from these walls, but in our hearts and lives.

At the Methodist Church, at 2.15 the new pastor, Rev. Mr. Smith, preached an eloquent sermon from Paul's 2d Epistle to Timothy, 4:1-2, "I charge thee, therefore, Preach the Word."—After referring to Timothy as an early convert to the faith, being recognized by Paul, and becoming changed into the same likeness and embued with the same desire for heroic sacrifices as the great apostle, the preacher spoke of the solicitude of Paul, not for himself, when threatened with martyrdom, but for the Church. He saw pitfalls ahead, and influences working for evil, and he turns his eye for a successor, and saw Timothy as the fitting one. To fit him for this work, he writes this last epistle, full of warning and appeals. The last echoes of that epistle are found in the text, and fell on the soul of Timothy as if dropped from heaven. Not to him alone, but to every minister of the gospel, to the preacher himself, it comes home to-day. Let us look a little closer at this charge, "Preach the Word." What is the scope of the word "Word?" Clearly it refers to the entire system of the gospel of redemption. It is the word of a divine gospel as recorded in Christ. All truth has its fountain in God, but some departments are more important than others. Archimedes became so overpowered by the truth that he ran through the streets crying, "I have found it." The astronomer, the geologist, each are absorbed in the truth of their own department of science. To the sick man science has no interest, save the science of the healing art. Everything is absorbed in that one thought. We have just that in the Gospel, as adapted to us. It is of supreme moment. Man is morally sick; sin has broken him away from God, and put there the image of death. Christ comes as his rescuer and salvation. He comes to save what is lost. All treasures of gold or riches are as nothing to a starving man; jeweled crowns are as nothing to a drowning man. So is Christ to the sinner—above everything else that can come to him. "Preach the Word." In the gospel ministry that should be the theme. No science is admissable save as it serves to exemplify and add a new lustre to the gospel. It is to save the world, and bring sinners from Satan to God. It is to be preached in completeness. Every science has its principles. Take a single one out, and it is imperfect. In mathematics, if addition is taken out, the science is destroyed. So it is in the gospel. If you look in the Bible, you find love the soul of the gospel. Love caused God to send Christ into the world.—Love coupled with mercy is the grand underlying inspiration of the gospel.—But it is not the whole. The law cannot save. It shows us our frailties, but it cannot forgive. The Gospel unites it. "God sent His son, that the righteousness of the law might be fulfilled in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the spirit." Here comes in justice. It brings justice and mercy to kiss each other. It brings harmony and the dove of peace to the wretched heart of man, making it possible for him to be an heir of God. Is there anything grander than this? The gospel is a gospel of holiness. It is a gospel of promises and warning. From the Bible come warnings as from no other book. The minister must preach all. Many like parts of the gospel. The preacher likes to preach love—from holiness, justice, condemnation, how many turn aside! There is a disposition to soften the way. But it will not do. There will be no softening here, as your minister. It may cost me sorrow, and knee work at the altar, but the preacher would be untrue to himself if he faltered in preaching the whole gospel. It should be preached wisely and skillfully. Some preached as if they loved the denunciations of a terrible truth. The preacher must understand human nature—must adapt himself to human beings. Paul became all things to all men. As a minister of the Methodist Church, the preacher presumed that the doctrine of that church was what they all knew. He was a Methodist, and should preach the gospel as understood by that church. Here he had a right to be independent. But in the methods, and how the work was to be done, he was not a ruler. He wanted the wisdom and suggestions of the church, and unless he was willing to take them, he was not fit for his duty. Thus, together, by God's blessing, we will draw people to God. Shall we thus work?

Rev. Mr. Smith is a man of much note in the Conference, and the society are fortunate in securing a pastor of such long and varied experience. He was born in Brookfield, Vt., and his first appointment was in Royalton, Vt., in 1842. His subsequent appointments were, Randolph, Vt., 1844-5; So. New Market, N. H., 1846-7; Dover, N. H., 1848-9; Manchester, N. H., 1850; Concord District, 1851; Great Falls, N. H., 1852-3; Agent N. H. Conference Tract Society, 1854; Agent N. H. Conference Seminary, 1855; Lynn Common, Mass., 1856-9. At the close of his labors here, he was offered the Presidency of the Female College in Pittsburg, Pa., but finding it badly in debt, and his health being poor at that time, and not feeling himself equal to the duties of the position, he declined, and for the remainder of the year of 1860 preached at Quincy Point. Since then he has been located at Hanover street, Boston; Bromfield street, Boston; Charlestown, Worcester, Lowell, Maplewood. Lynn and Ipswich.

It would be impossible for those of our lady readers who visited MR. CONRAD'S, last Thursday, not to be surprised at the marvellous display which was revealed to the eye. Mr. Conrad has the reputation of using excellent taste in the arrangement of all his goods on such occasions as the one of last Thursday, but the Millinery opening at that time surpassed anything he has attempted in this line; lovely hats, exquisite flowers, satins and velvets, with elegant suits, paletots, half-capes, Mother Hubbards and Neu Markeds in heavy gros grain silks, and satins, in black and colors, the latter in all the new shades of terra cotta, electric blue, crushed strawberry, cigar brown, mahogany, and the many named fashionable tints, were displayed in profusion. The store was crowded, and cries of "beautiful," were heard on every side. The children's department delighted the eye of every mother, and the pretty garments are designed and cut by a man milliner, in New York, and may be relied upon as the very latest fashion. Mr. Conrad has every reason to be gratified at the very flattering compliments on his display, and he assures us that it shall be his endeavor to deserve them in the future, by the low prices which he will make on his goods.

The scenic and sensational play to which Charles Read and Henry Pettitt gave their efforts, "Love and Money," is so finely represented at the Boston Theatre that it is no cause for wonderment that audiences grow enthusiastic over the production. The piece is to be seen for a limited period only, and the mine scene and other features should be seen by hosts of the admirers of grand stage pictures and effects. Next Wednesday afternoon at this theatre occurs the annual benefit of Harry A. M'Glenen, the well known business manager of this house. Mr. M'Glenen's personal popularity would assure a fine attendance on these occasions from the ranks of his firm and fast friends, who are legion in Boston, and nothing more than the announcement of the entertainment is needed to draw a large audience. Again, his entertainments invariably possess high intrinsic merit and attractiveness, so that experienced theatre-goers have learned to count with confidence upon an occasion of special enjoyment when Mr. M'Glenen's entertainment comes in the course of the season's round. The programme to be offered on Wednesday, the 9th inst., will be very interesting, and a meritorious entertainment may be counted upon as a matter of course. Seats should be promptly secured at the box office.

The following correspondence with regard to all the attractions of this entertainment will be read with interest:

Boston, April 25, 1883.

H. A. M'Glenen, Esq.

DEAR SIR.—It has just come to my knowledge that your annual benefit will take place on May 9, and remembering with feelings of pleasure and gratitude that you have been a life-long friend to the musicians I will tender to you the services of the "Boston Cadet Band" on the above occasion, and should you accept will appear in largely augmented numbers.

Yours very truly.
J. THOMAS BALDWIN,
Leader and Conductor Boston Cadet Band.

Boston, April 26, 1883.

J. Thomas Baldwin, Esq.

DEAR SIR.—Your kind note with its generous offer is at hand, and I most sincerely thank you for the appreciation which it conveys. It will add to the gratifications of "the benefit" to have the Boston Cadet Band participants in the entertainment, and with deepest gratitude I accept your proffer. Please thank the gentlemen of your organization for me, and believe me, always,

Very truly yours,
H. A. M'GLENEN.

A new comedy by Augustine Daly's company is being performed this week at the Park Theatre. "7—20—8, or the Boomerang," is Mr. Daly's own work, and it tells a story of flirtation, infatuation and complications that is most amusing, and with a pleasant flavor of life in Gotham that every one will appreciate. Miss Ada Rehan is the heroine, with whose portrait, numbered "7-20-8," at the Academy of Design, the susceptible Mr. Courtney Corliss, as portrayed by Mr. John Drew, has fallen desperately in love. It will hold the boards this week only.

The Union Square company will commence its annual engagement at the Park Theatre a week from Monday in "Love's Lesson, or the Rantzans," Erckmann Chatrian's famed play. Miss Georgie Cayvan, Miss Maud Harrison, Mr. W. J. Lemoyne, Mr. J. H. Stoddard and other favorites are included in Mr. Palmer's organization.

Another special production of romantic drama is offered by Manager Stetson at the Globe Theatre this week, when Dumas' famous play, "The Corsican Brothers," is presented in unusually elaborate fashion. Mr. F. De Belleville, Mr. Barton Hill and Miss Kate Meek are assigned the more important roles. A special feature is the bal masque scene at the grand opera, which introduces a comic harlequinade, led by Grimaldi, a grotesque ballet, introducing the Lorellas and other talent. All the effects employed in the recent revival of the drama at Booth's Theatre are presented here.

That Mr. Woolf's new opera has "caught on" no one can doubt who visits the Bijou and sees the throngs that gather to applaud "Pounce & Co." The cast shows constant improvement in work, and it would be difficult to better the performance in any essential. The opera will be repeated every evening, as well as on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons.

Manager Eugene Tompkins of the Boston Theatre will soon visit, in the interests of his house, the capitals of Europe.

Den. Thompson began to play in 1857. A company was organized at Toronto by Thompson and Cool Burgess, called the Burgess, Redmond and Thompson minstrels. Mr. Thompson played here for four months; he was then the middleman and wench dancer. The company then conceived the idea of taking a trip east, as far as Montreal. It was not a success, however. Thompson then went to John Nixon, who kept the old Royal Theatre in Toronto, where he soon became the great favorite. His first great success was "Uncle Tom" of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and he then succeeded well in "Tiff" in "Dread." Then he went into Irish comedy. "Joshua Whitcomb" is a freak of his own mind, which he wrote while confined for three months on a bed of illness at Cincinnati.

Frank I. Frayne, who is to appear at Mechanic Hall next Friday evening, is one of the best sensational actors on the stage. During the past five years he has played in nearly every large city in this country, appearing in Boston, New York and Chicago every season. His play, "Mardo, or the Nihilist," calls for excellent acting and fine scenery, and all who attend this entertainment will have the pleasure of witnessing both.

The charming Polish actress Modjeska appeared in Mechanic Hall, Friday evening, and received an enthusiastic welcome. The attendance was not what it should have been—there should have been no vacant seats. The character of Rosalind displayed the ability of Modjeska to good advantage, and her acting was superb—the slight foreign accent adding rather than detracting from the merit of the performance. The support was unusually good, especially the Orlando of Mr. Mitchell, and the Touchstone of Mr. Owen. Madame Modjeska was several times called before the curtain, and her pleasing manner in the closing epilogue made all regret to see the curtain fall.

The friends of the Salem Schubert Club will be pleased to know that a dramatic and musical entertainment will be given by them in Plummer Hall Friday evening. A farce and operetta will be presented, the parts of which will be taken by members of the Club. The Club have given some first class concerts, and should be encouraged in their efforts to promote the study and interpretation of choice musical works. We trust a goodly number of our citizens will be present.

Don't forget Joshua Whitcomb at the Peabody Institute to-morrow evening. The stage will be enlarged and the play given in full.

We were not as well pleased with Mr. Raymond in "Paradise" as his characterization of "Col. Sellers," yet the new play is irresistibly funny, and brought the house several times to fits of uncontrollable laughter. The support Monday night was fairly good, and the attendance good.

London Assurance was presented by Mr. and Mrs. Chanfrau, and Tayleure's Company, in splendid style last evening at Mechanic Hall—and it is to be much regretted that the house was so small. Mrs. Chanfrau has lost very little of the charm of her acting since she was leading lady at the old Globe Theatre, delivering the hunting speech as Lady Gay Spanker, in an admirable manner. Mr. Chanfrau as Sir Harcoart was a surprise to those who have only seen him in "Kit." Taken as a whole it was as fine a performance as has been in Salem this season, and those who absented themselves missed a rare treat.

The third excursion party sent out from Boston to Colorado and California this spring, by Messrs. Raymond & Whitcomb, took its departure from the Boston & Lowell station at 3 o'clock Thursday afternoon, in three Pullman cars. The travellers numbered, with those in charge, seventy-eight persons, including Mr. and Mrs. Geo. S. Osborne and Miss E. B. Osborne, of this town. Mr. Luther L. Holden of Boston was the conductor in charge, with Mr. George V. Moulton of Lancaster, N.H., as assistant, and Mr. Gilman W. Wheeler, of Boston, in charge of baggage. Fifty-nine days will be devoted to the trip, with the incidental sojourns in Chicago, Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, California and Utah, the party returning to Boston June 23. Messrs Raymond & Whitcomb have sent out altogether, this season, from the East, over three hundred and fifty tourists.

Poet's Corner.

In Memory.

BY LILLIAN WHITING.

An Autumn evening; purple tinged,
The dusky night closed round us.
Hushed into silence by the spell
With which that music bound us.

O, winds of might and stars of light,
That listened to her singing,
Through all the next day's dreamy light
To me that voice was ringing.

Thro' all the maze of magic mists
One haunting face before me,
With topaz crowned and amethysts,
Bent, like a spirit, o'er me.

The organ's deep and thrilling tone
Upon the air still lingers;
The dream was all the poet's own,
Touched by her dainty fingers.

Again, the wild waves kiss the shore,
The cold, gray stones revealing;
O, Love! your poet songs bring more
Than words can tell of feeling.

The tender grace of long-gone days
Its mystic spell is bringing;
I walk in memory's magic maze,
And listen to your singing.

Reconciliation.

My old and much-worn army coat
Has changed since it was new,
For when our civil war was fought
In battle's smoke 'twas blue.

But sun and rain have faded it
Since freedom won the day,
So I can hardly tell its hue
From that of Southern gray.

Yes, time has faded out the dye
It showed in cruel strife,
And while the blue blends with the gray
Our country gains new life.

'Tis true the faded cape will lift
When angry breezes blow,
And then behold the same old blue
Bright underneath will show.

But time goes on and all things fade,
Yes, all must have their day;
E'en my old faded coat and I
Must also pass away.

Yet our great nation will live on,
Her sons will e'er be true,
For time all difference will blend,
As blends the gray and blue.

At the Box-Office.

We stood within the corridor;
I had just stepped inside the rail
To get my tickets, when I saw
The state of matters and turned pale—
I had put on new clothes throughout
Upon this jaunt with her to come,
I'd brought this heavenly creature out,
Leaving my pocketbook at home.

I stood there vexed and mortified;
'Twas cruel as it was absurd.
Then did a little gloved hand glide
Straight into mine, without a word,
Leaving a dainty portmonnaie
Of gold and pearl most quaintly made,
From which, scarce knowing what to say,
I for the evening tickets paid.

When I sat down along with her—
"Now, don't look so annoyed," said she;
"Of course mistakes sometimes occur,
And people lose their property."
Confessed I answered, "I agree,
But must feel vexed about it though;
What's yours does not belong to me"—
Said she, "Why shouldn't it be so?"

She spoke unthinkingly, then blushed.
"Oh, do you mean it?" straight I cried.
My wild delight she would have hushed;
A feeble "No" in vain she tried;
But I'd not hear it; so at last—
"Yes—just to keep you still," said she.
"There, there, don't hold my hand so fast,
The usher will be sure to see."

Selected Story.

(From Agent's Herald.)

My First Lesson in Canvassing.

BY W. J. ELKHORN.

Yes, indeed those canvassing days have left pleasant recollections, and, I must also add, some very vivid ones.

Withal they were most profitable; for while they gave me a modest start in life by way of capital, the experience, sometimes rough and pointed, has been before me an inexhaustible storehouse of valuable facts and lessons. The knowledge of the world thereby gained was a school of the rarest sort.

Relate some incidents, do you say?

Well, that much is not my custom. An agent lives by his ability to talk; the thing is cultivated because it pays; but when we get tired of traveling, and settle down to other lines of work, as a class, we become the most silent of men.

This is true so far as my observation extends.

But I will relate one incident which was so ludicrous, and personally humiliating to me, that it has never failed, in the recollection of it, to compel me to keep my wits alert and about me. You, friends of mine, sometimes say that I am never "off guard," but ever ready to make the most of my unexpected turn in affairs. It is not a natural quality. It has come of painful cultivation.

In relating my story, I must be square with the facts. This is a very embarrassing position, and one which the general story-teller is not troubled with. It is a strong temptation where I am to make myself the hero of my narrative, that I have a little imagination in order to make him appear heroic.

Fact has to be wondrously manipulated before it gets to be fancy.

But my story must be without one tinge of relief from the latter pleasing coloring, and be only dipped in the sombre hues of the former.

There is one compensation to the agent in his greater exposure to human vicissitudes, and that is his ludicrous mistakes do not follow him. In the case of the young physician or lawyer, or minister, or teacher, a very small thing in the start, not seldom will prejudice him before the people, so that it will take years of painstaking to remove it, if even it can be accomplished by that means. Such a spectre never haunts an agent. He walks in a sort of meadow-land, and the grass he treads on quickly springs up on his track and leaves no trace behind.

I began my career as a book-agent. What I am to relate was on my first trial. I took a book, possibly because the publishers of books are most strenuous in forcing their line of employment upon the attention of the public. I had got my book and learned my lesson. I believed in my book, that is certain. It may be that it was the one book the most thoroughly impressed upon my mind of anything that I had ever perused or studied. Money was in it, for it was to be my business to sell it; and that I find is the great motive for the most earnest diligence in any division of labor.

I was by no means peculiar in that respect.

I had learned my book well and the publisher's methods for selling it. I had carefully mastered my forms of doing or not doing; of saying or not saying. With this, the young canvasser started for his field.

I was a very bashful boy, not having had that social culture which imparts self-possession and gives grace of manner. Awkward? It is hardly the word for it. But I made up in good grit, and the unsubduable determination to succeed at all hazards. And I did.

My field was where I was not known. In fact in a distant country. The village was a very pretty one, having some stylish residences and pretentious places of business.

It was called a smart place. The region around was a mountainous one, and the only center for a wide range was in the valley and at the village.

Everybody met at the hotel, or tavern as it is commonly called. The proprietor was a consequential sort of personage, being well-to-do and of good business judgment. I did not approach him for any advice; the uselessness of the endeavor to get suggestions from him was apparent even to my unsophisticated sense. But his clerk, a young man of my own age, was of a more considerate turn. My plan was to get a list of names with a sort of diagram of the neighborhood, and with location of families intelligibly marked so that I could have no hesitation in finding them. In this I succeeded admirably. I went to bed that night feeling buoyantly that my business was so well carried out according to my orders. The first step was taken, and everything was in excellent readiness for action on the morrow.

The next morning, as soon as light I was up. It was raining. The fact struck me ominously; but I would not be disconcerted by such a thing as the weather. I was nervous and my heart had a strange sensation. The situation would be well nigh tragic, if it were not really comic. So I reasoned summarily to put down my excitability. I was but partially successful. The breakfast was scarcely noticed.

Rain or shine I would begin work.

The rain compelled the use of an umbrella.

I started out.

From the particulars which I had gathered concerning the people, there was one house where I thought I would be as likely to sell my book as at any other, and thither I directed my steps.

It rained and the walking was muddy, that clay mud which is objectionably affectionate.

I gained the desired house, put down my umbrella in a convenient place, removed my rubbers, and with trembling hand rung the bell.

I heard it tingle within, so loudly that it startled me.

As I remember my condition at this time, I had a mind only for the bell tone. My action was merely mechanical. I put down umbrella without thought and the very house itself seemed a vague reality. The bell brought me to a sense of what was ahead in part, but at the same time, it took away what little observation I had been exercising.

I had rung the bell.

Soon the door was opened by a very pretty Miss—no domestic, but a veritable daughter of the house; as I could perceive, stupid as I was. There was a super-abundant mirthfulness in her look as she glanced out upon the book agent. This fact did not add to my composure. After the second attempt, I succeeded in producing a tone which had a meaning something like this:

Are the people of the house at home and can I see them a moment?

Her answer was, that mamma was at home, and she asked me to come in.

I followed.

I soon found myself ushered into a pleasant sitting-room where the good matronly lady was busying herself at her domestic affairs. She gave me a kindly, reassuring look, but which at the same time asked the object of my call.

I introduced myself in extending my card to her. It bore my name and the title of the book I was representing.

I had regained my composure somewhat, from the fact that I had now only to repeat my well-learned lesson, and I felt myself capable to do this in a pleasing, familiar way.

Both mother and daughter gave me their enquiring attention, as I began my recitation.

'This book, ladies, is one of the best preparations of the highest culture of modern times. No expense has been spared to produce a work on the intensely interesting subject of flowers, which no other publishing house can ever, in the long future, hope to equal, much less surpass. Flowers, permit me to say, are the angels of the earth. They are sent by the good Father of us all to minister to his children—a ministry of joy to the rich, and no less of gladness to the poor. And, yet, only God knows how to cultivate them without instruction. This book is to man, in his relation to the culture of flowers, what His omniscience is to Him.

My 'book of instructions' had required me not only to keep to the letter of my recitation, but to glance occasionally from one party to the other in order to watch the impression made. Up to this point, I had kept my eyes demurely on the table. I was far from being at ease. In fact, I knew that my voice was strained, and I made an effort to regain confidence.

At this point, from some fatality I cast a quick glance at the Miss sitting just beyond her mother, and as I did so, my self-confidence, already faltering, received a fatal shock. The expression of the girl's face was one of amusement rather than that of interest in what I was saying. My recitation was but just begun, and some very effective portions were yet to be delivered. The publisher's author had thought to be doing his best in its composition. But even that girl's expression—well, it cannot be described. My face I am sure began to burn in color if not in warmth; my hands were seized with a tremor. Should I go on? I could not. But it was my first real battle, and should I suffer a great defeat?

The good lady however, sustained a serious, kind look, and seeming to notice my book, I extended it to her, turning the leaves to the brightest illustrations. At this the Miss drew near and looked over her mother's shoulder.

It gave me a moment to regain my self-command.

In that interested look, I saw my only hope for retrieving what was lost.

'What a beautiful rose, mamma!' was the girl's exclamation of delight.

Indeed, said I, now throwing my speech aside and suiting my language and manner to the situation; indeed, such beauty as that, lovely as it is, is only the work of the engraver, while the flowers which may be cultivated, will excel it every way as God is greater than man.

As they turned from one page to another in the examination of the engravings, I really surprised myself with the ease which was at my command in speaking of the several points of interest.

'And its price?'—A question which surely follows any real interest in a book.

But the lady did not wish to purchase without the knowledge of her husband, saying that he would be at home in the evening, and she would be pleased to have me call then.

I thanked her, and also expressed the assurance that I would be most happy to wait upon them in the evening. I bowed myself out, while the last glance at the young lady showed some lingering gleams of the mirthfulness which she had a little before so emphatically expressed. It was, as I understand the human temperament now, that sense of mischievous hilarity readily responding to the slightest provocation and yet the farthest removed from cruel intentions. Not understanding the peculiar turn of mind, it went to my heart like a lance. My embarrassment made me morbidly sensitive. My sensations at that time were more disconcerting even than at the first. I closed the door with every thought crushed, and every feeling stifled into the one pang of wounded pride.

In this condition, I seized my rubbers, and putting them on, then my umbrella as I supposed, and hastily sought the walk. It had ceased raining and I had no need to spread the umbrella, and so as I thought, I swung it upon my arm and off I walked with all the dignity I could command.

I had proceeded several rods, passing the window opening from the room which I had left, and feeling the while that those eyes were upon me—and really thinking of nothing else—when a young urchin playing in the mud and water by the walk where I passed, cried out:

'I say, mister, that's a queer umbrel you have, haint it?'

I looked, and there to my horror I saw that I was carrying the mud broom, left at the door, instead of my umbrella. In my stupidity, I had seized it, not knowing what I took. I had struck an attitude with it like a soldier with his musket 'marching on.'

Talk as you may about Napoleon's retreat from Moscow, or ourselves at Bull Run, it was unequalled by that retreat which I made to replace the broom and to get the umbrella.

By this time, I noticed several young heads from the house opposite. And a sly laugh caught my sensitive ear. As my miserable luck would have it, I caught a quick glance at the window where she might possibly be viewing my discomfiture, and sure enough, there were her eyes fairly leaping with uncontrollable glee.

I got out of it as best I could. But that mirth went through me as a hot iron. I fairly rushed back to the hotel, paid up my bill, and started on foot for another field. I never could return to that house, nor show myself in any other habitation in that neighborhood. I was crestfallen. I had fought my first battle and had been fearfully beaten.

No—I conquered; for ever after I learned to have my wits about me, and with them tolerably sharpened, from that very day I succeeded.

Rev. Howard Crosby says that New York is ruled by "the lowest form of grog-shop politics;" that there are 12,000 liquor-shops there, or one to each 100 inhabitants, so that deducting women and children there is a liquor-saloon to each 35 men; but as at least 15 of these men do not drink, at least in public places, the other 20 men must on the average support the saloon and enable the proprietor to get rich. What a fearful contribution, then, many of these 20 must make during a year! These saloon-keepers are the men who keep up the clamor for workingmen to have a pay-day as often as possible.

Semper Idem—means what it says. Inquire for it at Geo. Stevens'.

SPRING

OPENING.

WM. S. BUTLER & CO.

Take pleasure in announcing that the alterations in their store are now completed, and that they are occupying Nos. 90, 92, 94, 96, and 98 Tremont Street, and 1 and 2 Montgomery Place.

The second floor is now also open for business, and on the third floor is a Ladies' Reception Room, where every attention will be given to the comfort of our customers.

These alterations will give us much-needed additional room for the display of our stock, and will afford to the ladies Better Accommodations and Light than are found in any other store in our line.

FIRST

OPENING

— OF OUR —

DEPARTMENT.

In order to place this department at once in rank with any first-class millinery establishment, we have secured the best talent to be had to give our Hats that beauty and elegance which is consistent with refined taste, at popular prices to suit all trade.

The success of such a department has never been tried in this city, a department where STYLISH TRIMMED HATS are sold at but small advance on the cost of hat and trimmings, and we trust that the ladies of Boston and vicinity will avail themselves of the opportunity to leave their orders early, so they can receive proper attention.

OPENING

— OF OUR —

COTTON UNDERWEAR DEP'T.

In order to place this department properly before the public, we shall offer at less than cost our inaugurating sale, as follows:—

Lot 1. Chemises, Drawers, Corset Covers, for Ladies and Children, at 25c. each.

Lot 2. Chemises, Drawers, Skirts, Night Dresses, Hamburg trimmed, at 50c. each.

Lot 3. The same, at 75c.

Lot 4. The same, at $1.00.

We refrain from giving a description of each and every article, and prefer giving good cloth and good trimmings to advertising the different clusters of tucks etc., and showing a poor article.

We hope ladies will avail themselves of this sale, as we shall not feel able to continue it for any length of time.

OPENING

— OF OUR —

DEPARTMENT.

This department has been placed at the rear part of our store, and has been made the most attractive place in Boston.

The department faces a sheet of mirror, 50 feet in length and 9 feet in height, so as to give every opportunity to the purchaser to see at a glance whether a hat is becoming or otherwise.

The following New Shapes will be offered at our opening: The Critic, Fedora, Iolanthe, Mignon, Poppy, Patti, Thursby, Nautilus, Casino, Sprite, Marquise, Servia, and many others.

Horse Cars pass our door from all railroad stations, a great convenience to our out-of-town patrons.

TO OWNERS OR KEEPERS OF DOGS.

Extracts from Chapter 102 of Public Statutes:

SECT. 80. Every owner or keeper of a dog of three months old or over shall annually, on or before the thirtieth day of April, cause it to be registered, numbered, described, and licensed for one year from the first day of the ensuing May, in the office of the clerk of the city or town wherein said dog is kept, and shall cause it to wear around its neck a collar distinctly marked with its owner's name and its registered number.

SECT. 81. An owner of a dog may at any time have it licensed until the first day of the ensuing May; and a person becoming the owner or keeper of a dog after the first day of May, not duly licensed, shall cause it to be numbered, described and licensed as provided in the preceding section.

SECT. 82. The fee for every license shall be two dollars for a male dog, and five dollars for a female dog.

SECT. 87. Whoever keeps a dog contrary to the provisions of this chapter shall forfeit fifteen dollars, five dollars of which shall be paid to the complainant, and ten dollars to the treasurer of the county in which the dog is kept.

SECT. 90. The mayor of each city and the chairman of the selectmen of each town shall annually, within ten days from the first day of July, issue a warrant to one or more police officers or constables, directing them to proceed forthwith to kill or cause to be killed all dogs within such city or town not licensed and collared according to the provisions of this chapter, and to enter complaint against the owners or keepers thereof; and any person may, and every police officer and constable shall, kill or cause to be killed all such dogs whenever or wherever found.

Grand Exposition by the Manufacturers!

Spring and Summer Clothing for the Million by the Great Clothiers of New England.

FRIDAY, APRIL 27, we shall inaugurate our 5th Great Annual Spring and Summer Opening of Fine and Medium Clothing for Men's, Young Men's, Boys' and Children's wear, and Gents' Furnishing Goods. We propose to make this opening one that will rival anything of the kind ever before attempted by any Clothier in the United States. We are the Largest Manufacturing Retail Dealers in New England. Headquarters, Manufactory, and Wholesale Rooms, 395, 397, 399, 401, 403 Washington Street, Boston. Our Branch Stores are located in the Principal Cities of New England. We have a Stock of $1,500,000 to draw our supplies from.

With the above stock we will guarantee to undersell all competitors from 25 to 40 per cent, no matter who they are or where they do business. We have done it in the past and shall continue to do it. It is a well-known fact that while some of our competitors have labored hard to capture the Clothing trade, by offering worthless goods to the public, and have been so badly defeated, We have constantly endeavored to keep our goods up to their original standard and by so doing have very largely increased our trade, during the past year. The "NAUMKEAG" understands the wants of the citizens of Essex County. They need no WATCHING neither does the "Naumkeag." REMEMBER! Our Store is nearly twice as large as any other Clothing Establishment in Salem. We carry four (4) times the stock and ten (10) times as many styles. Store Lighted every evening bp nine (9) Arc Electric Lights. We are now prepared to show the Largest stock, the Greatest Variety, the Finest Assortment, the Handsomest Patterns and by far the Most Desirable and Attractive Styles ever offered in Salem or New England, and at Prices within the reach of all.

A HARD WITNESS.

"Do you know the prisoner well?" asked the attorney.

"Never knew him sick," replied the witness.

"No levity," said the lawyer, sternly. "Now, sir, did you ever see the prisoner at the bar?"

"Took many a drink with him at the bar."

"Answer my question, sir," yelled the lawyer. "How long have you known the prisoner?"

"From two feet up to five feet ten inches."

"Will the court make the——"

"I have, Jedge," said the witness, anticipating the lawyer: "I have answered the question. I knowed the prisoner when he was a boy two feet long and a man five feet ten."

"Your Honor——"

"It's fact, Jedge, I'm under oath," persisted the witness.

The lawyer arose, placed both hands on the table in front of him, spread his legs apart, leaned his body over the table, and said:

"Will you tell the Court what you know about this case?"

"That ain't his name," replied the witness.

"What ain't his name?"

"Case."

"Who said it was?"

"You did. You wanted to know what I knew about this case." His name's Smith."

"Your Honor," howled the attorney, plucking his beard out by the roots, "will this man answer?"

"Witness," said the Judge, "you must answer the questions put to you."

"Land o' Goshem, Jedge, hain't I been doin' it? Let the blamed cuss fire away. I'm all ready."

"Then," said the lawyer, "don't beat about the bush any more. You and the prisoner have been friends?"

"Never," promptly responded the witness.

"What! Wasn't you summoned here as a friend?"

"No sir; I was summoned here as a Presbyterian. Narry one of us was ever Friends. He's an old-line Baptist, without a drop of Quaker in him."

"Stand down," yelled the lawyer in disgust.

"Hey?"

"Stand down."

"Can't do it. I'll sit down or stand up——"

"Sheriff, remove the man from the box."

Witness retires, muttering: "Well, if he ain't the thick-headedest cuss I ever laid eyes on."—Utica Observer.

GROWTH OF THE PRESS.

In a recent sermon preached in New York on the "Power of the Press," Rev. Charles H. Eaton said: "In a library at Florence there is a manuscript treating of the commercial and war news of the day, which was the beginning of modern newspapers. It was written about 1526. Journalism was begun by a physician who spent his leisure in collecting and writing scraps of news for distribution among his patients. In Germany and England the first newspapers were of the same style as the Florentine. The first American newspaper was issued in Boston in 1704. In 1725 Bradford started the New York Gazette. In 1775 there were only four newspapers published in this city. It was in 1833 that the large increase of influence of journalism began, and it has grown so that in 1870 there were 5,781 newspapers in America and 7,642 in the rest of the world. Since then America has surpassed all others. France issues 350,000,000 copies a year, England about the same number, while there are 1,500,000,000 copies in the United States. In 1833 a physician, Shephard by name, noticing the great sale of penny knicknacks in Chatham street, conceived the idea of a penny newspaper, and shortly after Story and Horace Greeley made the attempt to publish on that principle, neither however proving successful."—Express, Lititz, Pa.

POISON OF SCORPIONS.

The most recent investigations show that the poison of scorpions, though very active, is not so powerful as some have represented. A drop rapidly kills a rabbit when injected into the cellular tissue. Birds are as easily killed with it as mamals. One drop suffices to kill seven or eight frogs. Fishes and molluses are much more refractory, but on the other hand, the articulats are wonderfully susceptible; the hundredth part of a drop will immediate kill a large crab. Flies, spiders and other insects upon which the scorpion feeds are quickly affected by its sting. In all animals stung, there is first excitation and paralysis.—Ex,

THAT the Heathen Chinee is rapidly becoming civilized is evinced by the fact that Mr. Wah Lee, a Chinese laundryman, has sued the Louisville Courier-Journal for $3,000. The Heathen will be running for Mayor of Chicago presently.

Four pairs Ladies' Hose for 25 cts., at Peabody's.

Shaw Seamless Socks, 18 cts., for men, at Peabody's.

Does "may" mean "shall" in a statute? Not much! No more than almshouse means Parker House. Yet there are lots of folks who seem to think there is no difference in either case.—Lowell Vox Populi.

An old butcher way out in Missouri,
With neuralgia, he suffered like fury,
St. Jacob's Oil banished
The pain which all vanished—
And prevented a coroner's jury.

A cranky old man named Blake,
Says St. Jacobs Oil "takes the cake,"
He gave it one test,
And says it's the best
Cure in the world for backache.

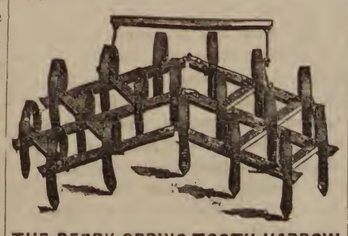
John A. Andrew Post 15, G. A. R., which has charge of 200 soldiers' graves in Mt. Auburn, has voted to discontinue the use of flowers on Decoration Day, and to place on each grave, only a Union flag, 12x18 in., mounted on a spear-staff 3 ft. long. It claims that the preparation of flowers involves much labor and expense of late years, though they were furnished freely and copiously at first; and that as a memorial they are less lasting and appropriate, even, than the national flag. The custom was taken from the practice of decorating confederate graves at the south in a land of flowers, while here, Post 15 claims, they are often difficult to get, and their use seems forced. Last year the Post was about equally divided as to the change, and it was not made; but since then, nearly every member has joined in favoring the flag without the flowers.

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

The American Kindergarten Society have established a Depot for the sale of American Kindergarten Material, at 23 West Union Square, N. Y. Also such articles as are most valuable for the education and entertainment of children—books, pictures, and all appliances necessary for Kindergarten, Primary and Home Schools. Send for illustrated catalogue, price 10 cents.

A gentleman who had for several years neglected to pay for his newspaper, was taken sick, and sent for the publisher, requesting him to bring his subscription bill. The bill was carried to the sick chamber, and at once paid. From that moment the gentleman began to improve and is now entirely recovered. An eminent physician expresses the opinion that paying that bill saved the patient's life.

MILLIONS GIVEN AWAY.



Millions of bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, have been given away as Trial Bottles of the large size. This enormous outlay would be disastrous to the proprietors, were it not for the rare merits possessed by the wonderful medicine. Call at Spaulding's Drug Store and get a Trial Bottle free, and try for yourself. It never fails to cure.

When you say to a Brooklyn man: "Your name is prominently mentioned in the paper this morning," a pleased expression does not appear on his face. He looks anxious and exclaims: "Great heavens, my wife musn't see it! I wonder what scrape is it that the darned reporters have got hold of, any way." Brooklyn differs from most cities.

"Trying to do business without advertising," remarks an exchange, "is like winking at a girl in the dark. You may know what you are doing but nobody else does." Trying to cure Catarrh by the use of snuffs and irritating liquid injections is the height of folly also. The disease will never be cured by such treatment. Moreover, the delicate lining membranes of the nasal organs will, sooner or later, become inflamed and diseased by such irritants. Ely's Cream Balm is not a snuff or liquid, and is easily applied. Its effects are pleasant, rapid and thorough. No case of Catarrh or cold in the head can withstand its effects. "I could scarcely speak," says J. O. Tichenor, dealer in boots and shoes, Elizabeth, N. J., "It was almost impossible to breathe through my nostrils, on account of Catarrh. Ely's Cream Balm cured me in a short time." All druggists sell it at 50 cents.

Editors and Publishers

WE CONSIDER it the duty, as well as privilege, of every citizen of our town to become conversant with the actions of our town officials, in carrying out the wishes of the voters, to whom they are responsible. The discussions held by the West Peabody Farmers' Club have had precisely this effect. It was with this end in view that we have given for the past three weeks a full and detailed report of what had been said by the different speakers. But there is a limit to all things, and judging that it was getting monotonous, we decided to omit this week the usual report. It is very easy for such an organization, composed of members on the outskirts of a town, to become disaffected, and critical of the money expended by the town, even if such amount has been legally appropriated by the voters. It is also probable that there are members of the club who would enjoy continuing the discussion all summer, especially as it seemed to have the effect to get their speeches reported, and to draw large numbers from the center of the town to listen to their fault finding.

We have been in doubt, and are still so, whether the reverend gentleman who makes the severest charges against the town's management, means what he says, or is only talking for the sake of bolstering up an argument begun by him for the sake of argument, solely. We incline, however, to the latter. It cannot be possible that a man of the ability of Mr. Spaulding, would make charges against the Poor department that he made last Friday night on such evidence as he gave as authority. The people of Peabody are not going to believe that our Alms House is or has been a second Tewksbury, even if Rev. Mr. Spaulding says so. And it will take more than one mess of tainted mutton, to convince them that insufficient food even in quantity or quality is provided for our poor. What if the meat was bad when it was purchased? It doesn't prove that the overseers were in the habit of buying such meat. It only shows that the man who sold it should have been provided with a worse place than the Alms House. It isn't claimed by any one that the inmates at the Alms House are served in Parker House style. And it should be remembered that those who have not been accustomed, before they were supported by the town, to even as good food as they obtain there, are the first ones to find fault. It was just so in the army. The soldiers who grumbled most at the rations provided, were invariably those who never had anything at home.

The gentleman takes exceptions to a comparison of our town and its expenses with that of Woburn. That place was selected by our correspondent last week and wisely, because its class of population so nearly compared with ours. It is well known, and was so stated by Mr. King, that a large proportion of the people who are supplied by the Poor Department, are our adopted citizens. But are they any the less entitled to support, if they become unfortunate, and need aid from the town? Would Mr. Spaulding have them cut off by the Poor Department? The town of Woburn is very like Peabody in this respect, and as to being bankrupt—well, if the gentleman had known more of that enterprising town, he would have been more guarded in his statements. The reverend gentleman has seen fit to take the PRESS to task, because we do not agree with him in reference to the salary of town officials, and particularly that of the town clerk. The teachers of this town are fortunately exempt from the criticism of Mr. Spaulding, in regard to the pay they receive. We agree with him. They are not extravagantly paid. Yet will any one compare the labors of our High School principal, at a salary of $1400, with the labors of Mr. Poor, even in his capacity as town clerk, simply, for which he gets $800? We grant that preparation and long study is necessary to become an efficient teacher, and that this should be considered. We also claim that preparation and long experience is necessary to become thoroughly acquainted with the duties performed by Mr. Poor. We do not wish to be understood as asserting that the salary of the principal of the High School is too large. Far from it. But in comparison with the hours of service to the town, taken in connection with the labors which Mr. Poor performs to earn his $1500 from the different offices—we claim that our town clerk is the poorest paid servant in the town. Reference was made to an error in the footings of the town report, and that a different kind of book-keeping was needed. If Mr. Spaulding or any other citizen will take the trouble to look at the books, he will find that it was not an error there, but simply an error in copying. It was an error, too, which could have crept into the report had the book been audited. An auditor would have examined the book, of the town, and not a copy of a report made from them. And the account of the department in which the error is, to which attention was called by Mr. Spaulding, is perfectly correct.

One word in closing. Rev. Mr. Spaulding said "the only charge he made against the officers, was that they were leading the voters on to extravagance." Will any one tell us how much voice these officials have had in the control of the expenses of the town for the past year? All the attacks of the gentleman are against the voters, the citizens of our town. These appropriations have been voted by us. We are responsible for them—not the officials. There may have been mistakes made by the town. What town is there that has not made them? But that there has been improper management in the departments, or that our Alms House is another Tewksbury, there is no evidence that is worthy the consideration of any man in his senses. The only damage that can come to us, is, that outsiders, reading the reports of the meetings, will take many of the insinuations of Mr. Spaulding for facts, when they are in reality very far from it.

The store of the Naumkeag Clothing Co., of Salem, was in gala attire last Friday, it being the occasion of their regular opening of Spring and Summer suits for Men, Youths and Children.—The windows were trimmed in the elaborate and tasteful style for which Mr. Gallup is noted, and a profusion of potted plants interspersed among the artistic colorings, added much to the display. Inside is a marvel. A marvel that so many goods, so many different styles and patterns, can be condensed even in the mammoth establishment of this store. But such it is. They have a larger stock of goods from which to select than ever before. Improvements are made in the ready-made clothing business every year, and we were shown some light overcoats made from the finest cloths, trimmed with rich materials, and which we should never have thought were ready made, had we not seen them at the Naumkeag. Dress suits, too, made from the best English goods, of a style and quality to suit the most fastidious—and at prices far below custom work. For a leader in low priced goods, there is an all wool suit, coat, pants and vest, for the enormous sum of $6 00. It is a well made and comfortable suit of clothes. Boy's suits are from $1.25 upwards, to suit all classes, all ages, and all pocketbooks. There is a fine English mixture suit, the best that can be made, for only $9.00. In gents' furnishings everything in the way of underwear, ties, scarfs, collars and cuffs, and all the little novelties, is nicely shown in the front of the store. We extend, in behalf of Mr. Gallup, a cordial invitation to our readers to visit this well appointed store when next in Salem, assuring them of the same courteous treatment whether they desire to purchase or not.

The American Bible Society will send an agent to Peabody within a few days, for the sale and gratuitous distribution of bibles and testaments. The history of this great society is well known to many readers of the Press. It is undenominational, and receives support from all Protestant churches. It was founded in 1810, and since that time has distributed about forty million copies of the scriptures. Its operations have been second in the magnitude to those of no other society only, the "British and Foreign Bible Society." By those two societies the bible has been printed in two hundred and twenty-six languages, and distributed widely over the earth. The agent, Mr. Ames, will canvass the town. He will bring with him specimen copies of the scriptures in all sizes and shapes and in all varieties of binding. The books will be sold at the exact cost of manufacture. Many families will embrace this favorable opportunity to increase their stock of bibles and testaments. The prices will be found to be surprisingly low. We commend Mr. Ames to the christian courtesy and attention of the citizens of Peabody.

We call attention to the card of the Union Patent Medicine Co., by which it will be seen that a prescription department is to be added to the store, at the usual low prices prevailing in this establishment. It will be under the charge of Mr. Horace Meacom, who is well known in town, and who will be pleased to see his friends there. A word to the wise is sufficient.

When our readers are in Boston they should not fail to visit the establishment of T. F. Swan, No. 12 Cornhill, who keeps the richest line of paper hangings in the city—at prices that will astonish them. His store is light and convenient, and you will get waited on with promptness and affability. You will like his goods.

PEABODY.

Yesterday morning the Assessors started on their annual tour around town, for the purpose of ascertaining the changes in property and the location of poll taxes. Each assessor has a particular district apportioned to him, and the work of investigation is pursued by him independently of the other members. Mr. Southwick takes the portion of the town the other side of the Lowell railroad track, which includes Central, Elm, Tremont as far as Wallis, and across "Hog Hill." Mr. Herrick looks out for West Peabody, Mr. Relihan takes in the territory known as "Dublin," and South Peabody, and Mr. Preston the rest of the town. This includes the central and thickly settled portions, Main, Washington, Lowell, and streets in this vicinity, and is the largest and most difficult job. It will take them in the neighborhood of ten days, particularly Mr. Preston, to complete the work. This does not include the personal property, which has to be looked after later. It may be remarked that scarcely any inventories of property are handed in to the assessors, as is done by invitation of the assessors in many places.

Mr. W. A. Giles, engineer at Little's mill, last Thursday afternoon, left his vest hanging on the mill, as was his custom, with watch attached to it. About four o'clock, having occasion to look for the time, he found the watch missing. Suspicion was fastened upon a lame person who had been seen around during the day, and Mr. Giles at once started for the depot, suspecting, as was true, that he would at once leave the town. It was found that he went to Salem on the 5.08 train, and officers were telephoned to in Salem to arrest him as he was going through, but it was too late. At last accounts he had not been heard from.

The officers of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, have appointed Miss Mary J. Floyd an agent of that Society, in Peabody. The object of the Society is to awaken interest in the abuses to which children are exposed by the intemperance, cruelty or cupidity of parents and guardians, and to help the enforcement of existing laws on the subject, procure needed legislation, and for kindred work. All cases of abuse or neglect toward children, known to any one in town, can be reported to Miss Floyd, Post office address, Lock Box 60. Residence, 54 Lowell street.

Yesterday being May 1st, the new tax on cigars goes into effect, which is a reduction of $3 00 per thousand. A rebate is allowed on all cigars on hand May 1st, whether in the hands of the manufacturer or dealer, if the amount is in excess of 3000. Most cigar manufacturers have been running light on their stocks, so as to have the rebate as small as possible, as they are likely to wait some time for it. Mr. Collins has raised the pay of his employes, giving them the benefit of a portion of the reduction in tax.

Our attention was attracted by the potted plants in bloom in the window of Hazen A. Spaulding, on the square, and we find that he has them for sale. He has a fine assortment, and it is a convenient place for our readers to select them. And just here we will say, that Mr. Spaulding intends having his windows reduced inside, with a handsome balustrade around them, to make room for an elaborate soda fountain, which he will put in about the middle of the month. It will be the handsomest one in town.

The advisability of supplying the fire department with rubber covers for use in covering furniture and other perishable personal property at fires, should receive the immediate attention of the board of engineers. It is clearly the duty of that body to provide some means of saving personal property, from the danger of damage by water, which is as much to be guarded against as the fire itself. Certainly this is just as deservable as the fire alarm system, and comes within their control.

We don't vouch for this, but then it was told us by a friend. A gentleman has worn whiskers for the past ten years. One day, recently, being away from home, he had them shaved off. Returning home on the late theatre train from Boston, he retired without arousing his better half, who was the first to awaken in the morning. She glanced at her side—Horrors! it was a strange man. A scream—an explanation. Tableaux.

One would naturally think that the Chief of Police had the granting of licenses in his own hands, when we learn that he has been ordered to investigate the premises of those who apply for license and ascertain if they conform to the requirements fixed by law. One would at once say that this officer is the one who will furnish us with a license, but that is only theoretical, practically the chief will have no more to do with the granting of them than a private citizen.

Merrill & Mackintire have an announcement in regard to wall papers, in another column, which it will pay our readers to notice.

The case of John W. O'Connell for disturbing a school in Wallis district on the afternoon of April 20, came up before Justice Merrill at 2 o'clock this afternoon. It seems that some of the boys who have been in the habit of selling the penny dailies about the streets have been allowed to leave the schools before the close of the session, provided they had their lessons, and were under no punishment for misdemeanor. The afternoon in question the lad, James O'Connell, was not allowed, on account of some failure in his lessons, to leave before the school closed. His brother came for him, but the teacher, Vienna A. Batchelder, declined to dismiss him. Shortly after his father came violently into the school while in session, and told the boy to take his hat and leave, against the wishes and commands of Miss Batchelder. Inasmuch as it was a disturbance of the school, the committee entered a complaint against him, and he was brought before Justice Merrill. The committee requested as light a sentence as the law allowed, as they desired a reprimand to be administered rather than a heavy fine, such as is provided by law in such a case. He was fined $3 and costs, with which he was not satisfied and he appealed. He was held in $100 bonds for appearance at the Superior Court.

ASSESSORS' NOTICE.

To the Inhabitants and other Persons Liable to pay Taxes in the Town of Peabody.

The Assessors of the Town of Peabody hereby give notice to the inhabitants of said town, and all other persons liable to pay taxes therein, that their office will be open on and after the first day of May until and including the first day of June, and all persons liable to be taxed in said town are hereby required to bring in at the said office true and perfect lists of all the polls (males twenty years old, and upward), and schedules and estimates of the personal estates for which they are liable to pay taxes.

Copartnerships

having a place of business in Peabody, and also in some other city or town within the Commonwealth, are especially notified to bring in a statement in accordance with the 24th section of the 11th chapter of the Public Statutes. Shipping and business income are not taxable to a firm, but each resident partner must include these items in his individual return.

Mortgaged Real Estate.

"Any mortgagor or mortgagee of real estate may bring in to the assessors of the town or city where such real estate lies," within the time specified in this notice, "a statement, under oath, of the amount due on each separate lot or parcel of such real estate, and the name and residence of every holder of an interest therein as a mortgagee or mortgagor. When such property is situated in two or more places, or when a recorded mortgage includes for one sum two or more estates or parts of an estate, an estimate of the amount of the mortgagee's interest in such estate or part of an estate shall be given in such statement." [Chap. 175 of the Acts of 1882]. When a statement in conformity with the law above quoted is brought in, the real estate therein returned will be assessed under sections 14, 15 and 16, of chapter 11 of the Public Statutes. But in cases where the mortgagor of the real estate has agreed in writing to pay all taxes assessed thereon, NO STATEMENT OR RETURN IS REQUIRED from either mortgagee or mortgagor, unless requested by the assessors in writing.

Estates in Trust.

Persons holding estates in trust, whether for minors or otherwise, are particularly requested to furnish the assessors with statements in relation to such estates. When trust estates, or estates of persons deceased, have been divided during the past year or have changed hands from other causes, the trustee, executor or administrator, or other person interested, is required and warned to give notice of such change; and in default of such notice, will be held to pay the tax assessed, although such estate has been wholly distributed and paid over.

Any person bringing in a list of all his taxable personal property will be assessed upon the valuation thereof, and any one neglecting to furnish the assessors with such list within the time above specified will be deemed at a legal meeting of the Board of Assessors, agreeably to the law of the Commonwealth. All persons will take notice that statements of personal property must be in writing, and subscribed under oath before one of the Assessors, at their office, on or before the FIRST DAY OF JUNE, and that the personal property of all taxable persons must be estimated by the Board, NOTWITHSTANDING A VERBAL STATEMENT OR INFORMAL WRITTEN COMMUNICATION TO ANY ONE OR MORE OF THE ASSESSORS. [Pub. Stat., chap. 11, sec. 39 and 41.] When a person has failed to bring in a list or schedule of all his taxable property, in conformity to this notice, no abatement of a tax so assessed upon such person for personal property can be granted, "unless such tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the amount which would have been assessed to that person on personal estate, if he had seasonably brought in said list; and if said tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the said amount, the abatement shall be only of the excess above the said fifty per cent. [Pub. Stat., Chap. 11, Sec. 73.]

Any person taxable in Peabody for personal property can obtain a BLANK SCHEDULE for making a list of such property, with directions for properly filling the same, by applying at the assessors' office.

Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations.

The attention of the Officers of all Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations, located in Peabody, is particularly called to the requirements of Chapter 217 of the Acts of 1882, as the property of said corportions, both personal and real, will be subject to taxation unless the law is complied with. Blank forms for the purpose can be had at the office of the assessors. may 2

TOWN OF PEABODY.

BOARD OF HEALTH REGULATIONS.

THE Board of Health appointed by the Town hereby make and publish, as required by law, the following "Regulations for the Public Health and Safety:"—

REGULATION 1ST. It being the duty of the Board of Health, of the Town of Peabody, to make such examination of the premises of persons residing in said town as they shall deem necessary for the public welfare, the Board hereby give notice and require that all premises within said limits shall be ready for inspection by the Board on and after June 1st, 1883.

REGULATION 2D. No house offal, filthy water, dead animals or refuse of any kind, shall be thrown upon the streets by any resident; and no butcher, fishmonger, or vender of merchandise, shall leave any refuse upon the streets of this town.

REGULATION 3D. If, upon inspection, any rubbish, offal, decaying animal or vegetable matter, or filth of any kind be found in, under or about any building, within any yard or enclosure, upon any premises, or in the ponds or water courses of said Town of Peabody, or if any privy or drain be found so discharging as to prove a nuisance, and offensive or deleterious to the public health, the owner or occupant of such property or premises shall be notified by the Board to remove or abate such nuisance within 24 hours after said notice has been served.

REGULATION 4TH. If any owner or occupant of property as aforesaid, after having been duly notified, shall neglect to comply with the requirements of the above section, the Board of Health shall cause any and all nuisances to be removed or abated at the expense of the owner or occupants.

REGULATION 5TH. No hogs or goats shall be kept within the limits of this town, except in pastures, or in enclosures kept free from standing water, and regularly and freely disinfected.

REGULATION 6TH. It shall be the duty of occupants of dwellings in which any person or persons may be sick with small pox, and Physicians attending such cases of small pox, forthwith to notify the Board of Health of the fact.

REGULATION 7TH. The occupants of buildings or dwellings where small pox exists, or has existed, shall prohibit and prevent the removal of clothes, bedding and upholstering, or other articles from the infected buildings or dwellings, except the removal is made by permission, or under direction of the Board of Health.

REGULATION 8TH. The occupants of buildings or dwellings where Scarlet Fever and Diphtheria exist shall withdraw all children attending school from the same; and the teachers of said schools shall not allow children thus withdrawn to re enter the school until they shall present a certificate from the attending Physician vouching for the safety thereof.

REGULATION 9TH. Night soil carts shall not be allowed to pass through the streets in the thickly settled portions of the town between sunrise and sunset, from May 1st to Nov 1st, without a special permit from the Board of Health.

These Regulations will be Strictly Enforced.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The Annual Report of the School Committee has been printed. It is a book of 36 pages, and in it is included the rules and regulations of the school department. The chairman's report gives some interesting statistics as to the distribution of the scholars in the different districts, and the cost of support of each. He shows that the expense of this department, when compared with that of other large towns and cities, is not large. According to the last Report of the State Board of Education forty-five towns and cities appropriated a larger amount than Peabody. In regard to the matter of supervision the chairman says: "We need an officer who can make visitations a matter of business, in order to report to the Committee the comparative condition of the classes at all times, to keep corresponding grades in line with each other, to watch and guide inexperienced teachers, to correct deficiencies when possible, and to see that any local improvements are made general. To meet the long felt want, Mr. G. Fred Osgood, of the Committee, has, at the suggestion of the Board, consented to devote for the present a portion of his time regularly to the work of supervision." The report of Mr. Theodore M. Osborne, on the High School, favors the lengthening of the course in that school from three years to four, and suggests that "it would add very greatly to the efficacy of the physical and scientific department if there were better accommodations for the chemical and physical laboratories, and some substantial addition to the scanty apparatus." The following are the general statistics:

Number of public schools in 1882,	22
Number of male teachers,	4
Nomber of female teachers,	34
Number of persons in town May 1, 1882, between 5 and 15 years of age,	1634
Average number belonging to the schools,	1489
Number of pupils who have attended the public schools during the past year,	1618
Average attendance,	1249
Percentage, (of average number)	83.81
Number over 15 years of age,	82
Amount raised by the town for support of schools,	$23,200.00
Amount received from State School Fund,	$166.85
Amount received from dog tax,	$552.81
Wages paid to teachers,	$18,754.83

The Boot and Shoe Edition of the Boston Advertiser of April 23d, has the following complimentary notice of L. B. Southwick & Co., of this town:—Although only established in December of last year, the firm of Messrs. L. B. Southwick & Co., Foster street, Peabody, manufacturers of sheep leathers of all descriptions, has already made itself a reputation as a trustworthy and reliable concern with which to transact business. It has been said over and over again by those supposed to be conversant with the subject, that no branch of the leather interest gives such unsatisfactory returns to the tanners and dealers as sheepskins. This may be so in some instances, but the indications at present are that the firm under notice will prove an exception to the rule. The firm as at present composed consists of L. B. Southwick and J. B. Thomas, and their factory, a frame one, measuring 170x32 feet, is fitted up with every requisite for carrying on the business. They make a specialty of domestic stock, in all grades and colors, pulling their own skins—one great advantage they have over other manufacturers. Mr. Southwick was for many years associated with his brother, Mr. H. A. Southwick, the firm then being known as Southwick Bros. The present concern also own a wool factory, and do quite an extensive trade in that line. Mr. Southwick is a young and enterprising man of practical experience, and with ample capital at command, has every reason to expect continued success. Full stocks are always kept on hand; the firm can, at very short notice, fill orders to a large amount, and solicits trade from all parts of the country, from those who deal in the concern's specialties.

The May breakfast and sale of the Unity Club yesterday, was a very successful affair. A goodly number were present at the breakfast, which was served in fine style by the young ladies of the club, consisting of cold meats of all kinds, eggs cooked to order, fish balls, baked beans and brown bread, hot rolls, etc. Up stairs was a table covered with aprons of every conceivable style, and in the center a flower booth, decorated with flags and bunting, while at the other side was a candy table. A larger number were present at the supper, and ice cream and amusements of different kinds, including Madame Jarley's wax figures, filled out the evening's entertainment. A handsome sum was realized.

Mr. Charles F. Smith of Lynn, who has had a long connection with the press, has assumed the editorial management of the Lynn Daily Bee.

The different fire companies held meetings last Monday evening, for the choice of officers for the ensuing year. The following is the list:

Hose 1—Foreman, C. K. Mallard; Assistant Foreman, Fred B. Thomas; Clerk and Treasurer, A. D. Gray; Steward, Frank Price; Trustee of Firemen's Relief Fund, C. K. Mallard.

Hose 2—Foreman, D. A. Larrabee; Assistant Foreman, U. A. Brophy; Clerk and Treasurer, C. A. Currier;

Hose 3—Foreman, John O. Buxton; Assistant Foreman, C. H. Hooper; Clerk and Treasurer, S. F. Potter; Steward, F. A. Wilkinson.

Hose 4—Foreman, A. E. Johnson; Assistant Foreman, John H. Moreland; Clerk and Treasurer, Chas. H. Stanton; Steward, F. H. C. Lord; Trustee of Firemen's Relief Fund, A. E. Johnson.

Hose 5—Foreman, Walter Curtis; Assistant Foreman, Dan'l. B. Brown; Clerk and Treasurer, Lewis S. Peabody; Steward, Lewis K. Putnam.

Steamer 1—Foreman, W. J. Roome; Assistant Foreman, John A. Hart; Clerk and Treasurer, George H. Carr; Steward, Joseph Corning; Trustee of Firemen's Relief Fund, John A. Hart.

Steamer 2—Foreman, M. W. Cummings; First Assistant, W. H. Hildreth; Second Assistant, John F. Moreland; Clerk and Treasurer, J. B. Reith; Steward, Frank Clough; Trustee of Firemen's Relief Fund, John F. Moreland.

Hook and Ladder Truck—Foreman, J. H. Miller; Assistant Foreman, Horace A. Wilson; Clerk, W. P. Hills; Treasurer, Thos. E. Wilson; Steward, William H. Joll; Trustee of Firemen's Relief Fund, W. H. Joll.

Mr. John H. Sutton, son of Gen. Eben Sutton of North Andover, and Miss Mary O. Jacobs, daughter of Joseph Jacobs, Jr., of this town, were united in marriage last Thursday evening, Rev. W. G. Sperry, pastor of the So. Congregational Church, officiating. About one hundred and fifty invitations were issued, and the guests included many from out of town, as well as the numerous friends of the fair bride in Peabody. The rooms were elaborately decorated—the couple being married under a floral horseshoe. Miss Lulu Sutton of No. Andover, and Miss Fanny Reynolds of Boston, were the bridesmaids, and Messrs. Eben Sutton, Jr., and Dale of North Andover, were best men to the groom. The presents were numerous, and included very valuable pieces of silver of all descriptions, among them a dozen of heavy solid silver forks, engraved with the letter "S," from the employes of the mill which he superintends. The Salem Cadet Band furnished the music, and a collation was furnished by Hall & Whipple, of Boston. The pair took coach to Boston late in the evening, whence they left for Fortress Monroe and New York. Monday evening Mr. Sutton entertained the employes of Suttons and the North Andover Mills, and the Eben Sutton Company, at Merrimac Hall, the occasion being his recent marriage. There was a concert, dancing and supper.

The correspondent of the Odd Fellows' Register, C. H. Kilby, has the following in regard to Holten Lodge, of this town: Holten Lodge, No. 104, as I have before stated, was reinstated on its original charter in 1878, and is now in a prosperous condition with an active membership of one hundred and fifty, composed largely of young men. Since the commencement of the new year fifteen candidates have been initiated. The financial condition of the lodge is healthy, with few sick members on the list. My visit to Holten Lodge gave me acquaintance with many genial and kindly-disposed brothers. Bro. James Buxton, who has been a regular patron and constant reader, aided me greatly in giving the paper a wide circulation. Bro. Buxton and his estimable wife are both zealous workers in the D. of R. lodge. I accepted their kind invitation to renew my visit to the town on the following day. The Rebekah Degree Lodge is located at Salem, and has a membership of one hundred and thirty-seven. Out of this number eight are residents of Peabody and eight at Danvers. Sister Buxton represented the lodge in the state convention of D. of R. lodges which meets annually in the cities and towns about Boston.

Although it is early in the season, a party of about thirty were present at Gun Rock cottage on the Marblehead shore, as guests of the owners, Mr. and Mrs. Sumner Southwick, the special occasion being the latter's birthday. This occurred really, a few days ago, but it being stormy then, the affair was postponed until May day. A little present had been prepared for Mrs. S., which was presented by Mrs. John Teague in a neat little speech which created great merriment. The hosts provided most excellent fish and clam chowders which were supplemented by several dainties. With the grand ocean view, the social gathering and the appetizing dinner, a very enjoyable occasion was reluctantly closed in the afternoon.

At a meeting of the Selectmen last Saturday, the following were granted licenses as innholders: John H. Tibbets, Wm. J. Roome, Stephen Cragin, John Desmond, John H. Bresnahan, Michael Carney, Wm. T. Dunney, Elizabeth M. Lillis.

HERE AT LAST.

After Long and Weary Waiting Relief is Brought to those who Need it.

"Well, Pat," said an Orange county Physician to a complaining Irish patient some years ago, "for that pain in your chest you had better go home and put on a mustard plaster. I can't think this minute of anything better. And by the way," added the doctor turning to a friend, "I wish somebody would invent a real good plaster—something actually helpful for such cases as Pat's. Maybe they will sometime, when its too late for me to use it."

When BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER was placed on the market about ten years ago the doctor's hope became a fact. Because of the rare medicinal virtues inherent in it, its rapid action and sure results, the Capcine is fast displacing the slow-acting plasters of former days, for all affections to which a plaster is ever applicable. Price 25 cents. In the middle of the genuine is cut the word CAPCINE.

Book Notices.

The May ATLANTIC continues the remarkable excellence attained by the previous numbers of this year. Those who have read Mr. Howell's delightful story, "Their Wedding Journey," will read with peculiar zest his charming paper, "Niagara Revisited." Dr. Holmes contributes a three-page poem, and one of the best he has ever written. The Second Act of Henry James' comedy, "Daisy Miller," will have a host of readers.—Miss Sarah Orne Jewett has written a very engaging two-part story, "A Landless Farmer," of which the first part appears in this number. "Colonialism in the United States" is an admirable historical paper by Henry Cabot Lodge; "The Floods in the Mississippi Valley," by Prof. N. S. Shaler, cannot fail to enlist the interest of many thousands. "The Rain and the Fine Weather" is a capital out-door essay by Edith M. Thomas.—Other poems, essays, reviews of important new books, and three bright, short essays in the Contributors' Club conclude a very interesting number of the Atlantic. HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

The Season, a lady's illustrated magazine, for May, contains the newest Paris fashions and the most elegant designs in fancy work, embroidery, etc. There are two colored plates, two national costume pictures, 192 illustrations of dress and needlework, 21 flat paper patterns, etc.—The Season is the leading magazine of its class. International News Co., New York.

Harper's Magazine for May is an exceedingly interesting and beautifully illustrated number. The opening article is a novel and striking presentation of the salient features of San Francisco, by W. H. Bishop, effectively illustrated.—"Roman Carnival Sketches," by Anna Bowman Blake, is an entertaining and picturesque paper, illustrated by Mr. Reinhart. An exceedingly interesting story of the building of the Brooklyn Bridge is contributed by Wm. C. Conant, with twenty-one illustrations. Walter Herries Pollock contributes an article on Anthony Trollope, accompanied by an excellent portrait. A new serial novel is begun in this number, entitled "A Castle in Spain"—a story full of droll humor, profusely illustrated by Abbey. Prof. John F. Weir contributes an article of especial interest to young art students, on "Art Study at Home and Abroad."—John Fiske concludes his studies of the Colonial period with an interesting and thoughtful paper entitled "The Middle Colonies before the Revolution." Dr. T. M. Coan's brief article, entitled "Fresh Air in Summer," is timely and suggestive. Poems are contributed by Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, Herbert E. Clarke and Louise Chandler Moulton. Mr. George William Curtis in the Editor's Easy Chair, while commending the courage of Dr. Dix's Lenten sermons on the frailties of the fashionable women of to-day, suggests that the evils complained of are due to the unnatural restrictions by which women are denied freedom of choice in the conduct of their lives. The other Editorial departments are full of timely and entertaining matter in their respective fields. Received by Peabody News Co.

With part 24 of Something to Read, is given away a large model of Kenilworth castle, with courtiers, knights and an old-fashioned May-pole, forming an interesting picture. Two new stories begin in this part. Something to Read is a special favorite with all readers of current fiction. International News Company, New York.

The Art Amateur for May contains the first of a series of articles on "Practical Wood Carving for Amateurs," by Calista Halsey Patchin; some attractive South Kensington embroidery designs, a page of monograms in "B," and a profusion of designs for jewelers' use. There are illustrated articles of much interest on the decorations of the Cornelius Vanderbilt house, on the costumes and jewelry worn at the Vanderbilt ball, on charcoal drawing, on Japanese china decoration, and on a remarkably embroidered mitre.—Other articles of special practical value are those on portrait drapery, flower painting in water colors, mural decoration, and embroidery in gold and silver. The May number concludes the fourth year of the Art Amateur, and the index for the last twelve months gives a vivid picture of the surprising wealth of designs and instruction contained in this invaluable magazine. Price $4; single numbers, 35 cents. Montague Marks, publisher, 23 Union Square, New York.

Protection to Young Industries, as applied to the United States, by F. W. Taussig, Instructor of Political Economy in Harvard College, is a handsome volume, which was written in competition for the Toppan Prize in Political Science at Harvard University, and received that prize in October, 1882. The argument for protection to young industries is the opening chapter, followed by the industrial history of the United States, and the course of protective legislation. Then is given a short history of the three principal manufactures, cotton, iron and woolen; making a valuable book for any one wishing to become familiar with the leading industries of the United States, and their progress, without reading through hundreds of pages of matter, as it is condensed and accurate in its treatment of the subject.

The May Century makes appeal to a large variety of tastes. By way of history and adventure there are three illustrated papers: "The Aborigines and the Colonists," by Edward Eggleston, who has made the study of American Indians a specialty, and who brings to light many curious and interesting facts; the first of two papers by H. H., on the Spanish Missions of Southern California, entitled "Father Junipero and his Work," and thirdly, a paper of great readableness and ethnological value, by Frank H. Cushing, on his "Adventures in Zuni." Apropos of the recent criticism of American literature and American writing about England, Mr. Chas. Dudley Warner makes a retort courteous to his critics in a humorous paper entitled "The English Volunteers during the Late Invasion."—In fiction there is an installment of Mr. Howell's serial "A Woman's Reason;" a short story by F. R. Stockton in the Rudder Grange series—"Pomona's Daughter;" and the first half of a story of much freshness and humor by Joel Chandler Harris ("Uncle Remus"), namely "At Teague Poteet's." In "Topics of the Times" are brief papers on "The Effect of Civil Service Reform upon Parties" and "The Appointment of Postmasters," together with this announcement of a "New Departure" in the make-up of the Century, and the reasons therefor. The poetry in the number is by Rose Hawthorne Lathrop, L. Frank Tooker, Richard Watson Gilder, Joel Benton, John James Piatt, and others.

St. Nicholas for May has a woodsy, spring flavor, and opens the second part of the volume with a strong table of contents, important features of which are the opening chapters of "Swept Away," a new serial story of the Mississippi floods, by Edward S. Ellis, some time editor of Golden Days; and the first part of "The Story of Robin Hood," by Maurice Thompson. A paper with a very suggestive title is "The Last of the Peterkins." The interesting family, whose misadventures, so eloquently told by Miss Lucretia P. Hale, have been followed for many years by thousands of readers, have at length gained enough in worldly wisdom to become almost like other people. The children have grown up, and the parents pass out of our sight in a last wild freak. The "Work and Play" department consists of a clever and original article, crowded with pictures and diagrams, entitled "Chalk-Talk," by Frank Beard, and shows how bright girls and boys may entertain their friends in the same way. Charles Barnard, Jessie McDermott, W. H. Drake, Culmer Barnes, and many others, help to make a capital issue.

MR. SULLIVAN KNOCKED OUT.—No pugilist, and indeed no man in any profession, ever had such a uniformly successful career as Mr. John L. Sullivan. He has been a man of many undertakings, and his long record of successes has been interrupted by only one failure. But this time it is the champion who has been knocked out. Mr. Sullivan, as we are informed, has been so prostrated by a hemorrhage from the lungs, brought on or aggravated by the excessive use of liquor, that it is very doubtful whether he will be able to keep his appointment with Mr. Mitchell on the 14th of May, when he and the English champion propose to test their relative merits at the Madison Square Garden. There is one advantage which alcohol always has over any one who presumes to wrestle with it. It will always find the weakest spot. A pugilist with a stout head and a weak body, or a weak head and a stout body, can always modify his defence to suit his peculiar weakness. If his ribs are weak he can pay special attention to guarding them and let his antogonist batter away at his head, or adopt the opposite course if necessary. But when he tackles ardent spirits no such cunning or forethought is of any use. Alcohol will always find the most vulnerable point in a man's body, and nothing can prevent it from making its full effect felt there. In Mr. Sullivan's case it seems to be his lungs that are weak, and the effect of his recent excesses is a hemorrhage from which it is possible he may never entirely recover. If he does, he will know that there is an enemy with which he cannot successfully cope.—N. Y. Sun.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has just published the regulations governing the redemption of internal revenue stamps. Check and general proprietary stamps will be redeemed at their face value, less five per cent. The blanks on which stamps are printed will be destroyed unless the claimant requests their return, in which case the word redeemed will be impressed on the check or draft, which will then be returned. Stamps will only be redeemed when presented by a bona-fide owner or a duly authorized agent.

We are in receipt of Price, Lee & Co.'s New England Railway Guide, which is really a fine thing, and which should be in the possession of every traveller, and, in fact, every person who desires to be informed of the starting time of trains on the different roads. It contains a map of New England, an index of the roads and of all railway stations in New England, giving the road on which they are located, with their connections, and the distances between the stations, and the fares—all for 10 cents. It is for sale by the Peabody News Company, and is published monthly. It is the neatest thing we have seen in the way of a guide.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN BOSS.

How to Promote Personal Power—A New Radical Reformer.

"There is no provision in the Divine economy for political bosses!"

With a bang of his fist, and in the voice of a man who had made up his mind on the subject, Rev. James Chambers of Calvary Presbyterian Church, Harlem, recently opened his sermon with this announcement. He was right. The only boss authorized by the Book is mentioned in these words: "He who ruleth his own spirit is greater than he who taketh a city."

Commonly, the better side of men is subject to the despotism of the worse side. Bad passions, bad humors, mean jealousies and base revenges are all bosses. One of the worst of bosses is bile. What is most depressing in philosophical or theological thought is due to it. Old General Debility is another tyrannical boss. He lashes men who are naturally bad or miserably weak.

Concerning his deliverance from this bondage, Rev. S. P. Lewis, pastor of the Eighth Street Baptist Church, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "I was suffering from exhaustion and general debility. As an invigorant I used PARKER'S GINGER TONIC. I never met with anything so effective It is an elegant family medicine. I take a bottle in my valise when I go on my annual vacations."

PARKER'S GINGER TONIC neither intoxicates nor promotes a desire for strong drinks. The most pronounced temperance people use and praise it for this reason alone. It cures Malarial Fevers, Consumption, Rheumatism, and all diseases of the Blood. Also weaknesses peculiar to women Its action is prompt and pervasive. Test it once, and you will adopt it as a home remedy. Prices, 50 cents and $1 a bottle. HISCOX & Co., Chemists, New York.

A GOOD ODD FELLOW.

Mr. Cutler, of 21 Lyons St., New Haven, Conn.—How He takes Life Easy now and how He Obtained the Means to Regain his Health.

Mr. Cutler, of 21 Lyons St., is a faithful Odd Fellow, and for forty years a member of Quinipiac Lodge No. 1 (the oldest organization of its kind in the State of Conn.) He is a man much respected in New Haven. Your reporter found him at his pleasant home on Lyons street one afternoon, taking life easy. "You see," he says, "I'm trying to make myself feel a little indisposed. I presume its the lingering results of a Lodge dinner which I attended a while ago down at the beach. I have been, as many of my friends in New Haven know, a sufferer for years from indigestion and biliousness. When I have indulged in too hearty food I've had to suffer at times extremely. As a result I've had to place myself under my physician's care often, and I have taken a great many remedies, but I find after a thorough trial that Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is the most excellent medicine I have ever had knowledge of for any of the disorders above mentioned. It leaves no exhaustive effects, but rather strengthens and regulates the digestive organs in a charming manner. We keep it as a household medicine, and I have recommended it to my friends, for it is an excellent preparation."

Mr. Cutler is a man whose word can be depended upon. His testimony is but a re-echo of the words of thousands in New England who have received relief from the sole use of Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY.

PROBATE NOTICE.

Miscellaneous.

HANNAH JANE.

Poor old man! He walked feebly and disconsolately about the leaf-strewn cemetery and paused now and then with a weak, irresolute air of uncertainty that betokened a failing and troubled mind; he seemed to be looking for some one or something, and yet he did not stay his footsteps at any of the graves, and he passed the costliest monuments without a glance.

Presently he retraced his way and, seeking here and there among the unmarked graves in the same listless, dazed way, approached a laborer working in one of the avenues, and asked, tremulously:

"Can you tell me where Hannah Jane is buried, my friend?"

The man looked up roughly, and if the speaker had been arrayed in fine broadcloth, with a weed in his silk hat, he would have given him an ungracious answer; but he saw a thin old face set in a frame of white hair, a bent and shrunken form in humble garb, and he answered, respectfully:

"Who did you say, sir—what name?"

"Hannah Jane. She's my wife, you know, and because of my son they buried her here instead of down in our country graveyard, where we used to live years ago. My son's a big man here—a business man—and he gave us a lot worth two hundred dollars to bury her in. I bought a Virginny rose and a sweet-briar and some sweet-williams and planted on it. Mebbe you'd know it now."

"I don't know as I do," said the workman, gently, "but if you think you can tell me about where the grave is, I'll try and help ye."

They walked up and down a little, and then the old man stopped beside a splendid white marble shaft that reared its fair proportions far above the neighboring monuments, and shaking his head, feebly said, with the old irresolution.

"It's very strange, an' I can't make it out at all—mebbe I'm gettin' old, but I was sure this was the spot."

The workman put up his hand to hide a smile,

"That ere grave don't look like as it ever had sweet-william planted on it, does it old man? I'm favorable to them flowers myself. Hallo! Wot did you say the name was?"

"Hannah Jane," answered the old man, reverently lifting his hat from his white hairs, "and wherever you are, my dear, God bless you!" he added, looking up to Heaven.

"Wall, now," said the workman, getting down on his knees to look at the lettering on the bran new shaft, "this beats me! Here's a H and a J-a-n-e; what's the rest of the name, old man? Foster?"

"Yes, yes!" answered the old man, eagerly; then a look of bitter disappointment crept over his face. "You don't mean it," he said, slowly, "they never gone and put their great monument over Hannah Jane, she that wanted birds and flowers and the blessed air of Heaven above her and the sun shinin' and the dew fallin on the spot where she slept; she that built a ladder to the skies in good deeds and was humbler than a leetle child, and would rayther have had a board at her head, down in the old graveyard, with plain Hannah Jane on it carved by me! it don't seem right, that's all!"

He went away sadly and lingeringly and he never came back, but the man he talked to planted sweet-william and rose slips on the grave and it looks strange to see them tangled in wild profusion about the stately marble, and whenever he sees a funeral stop near that spot he looks to see if another grave is dug there, "For some day," he says to himself while he works, "my old man will come back to his Hannah Jane."—M. Quad.

"CALLING THE NECK."

North Devon has a curious custom at harvest time of "calling the neck." When the reapers have completed the reaping of the last field of wheat, a bundle of the best wheat is selected and arranged neat and trim. The reapers them crowd round it, take off their hats, and bow to the "neck," i. e., the said bundle of wheat, and then begins a long harmonious shout, "The neck," three times, the men bowing and raising themselves at the same time. They then change their cry to "Wee yeu!" "Way yeu!" ("yeu" means end). After this has been done three times, they break into a loud, joyous laugh, flinging up their caps and capering about. One of them seizes "the neck," and runs to the farm-house with it as fast as he can, trying to get into the house unobserved. If he is successful in getting in without being seen, he may demand tribute from the dairy-maid, who stands at the door with a bucket in her hand, but if she sees him while he is trying to get into the house, she holds the right to souse him with the contents of her bucket.

He who calls in the aid of an equal understanding doubles his own, and he who profits by a superior understanding raises his powers to a level with the height of the superior understanding he unites with.

There is nothing more necessary than to know how we may bear the tedious moments of life.

Who soars too near the sun, with golden wings, melts them.

Martin Johns, a well-to-do farmer of Harrison county, Ind., devised all his property to the county poor asylum. His will orders all his real and personal property sold within a year, the money derived to be placed at interest as a perpetual fund, and the interest to be used in supplying the paupers with such necessities as they may require and the county does not furnish.

Human life is everywhere a state in which much is to be endured.

I testify to the most excellent qualities of Prof. Darbys Prophylactic Fluid. As a disinfectant and detergent it is both theoretically and practically superior to any preparation with which I am acquainted.—N. T. LUPTON, Prof. Chemistry.

Darbys Fluid is Recommended by
Hon. ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS, of Georgia; Rev. CHAS. F. DEEMS, D.D., Church of the Strangers, N. Y.; Jos. LECONTE, Columbia, Prof., University, S.C. Rev. A. J. BATTLE, Prof., Mercer University; Rev. GEO. F. PIERCE, Bishop M. E. Church.

INDISPENSABLE TO EVERY HOME.
Perfectly harmless. Used internally or externally for Man or Beast.
The Fluid has been thoroughly tested, and we have abundant evidence that it has done everything here claimed. For fuller information get of your Druggist a pamphlet or send to the proprietors,

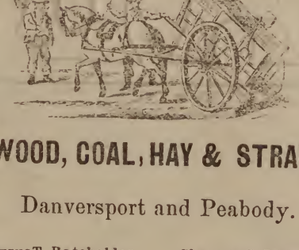
Manufacturing Chemists, PHILADELPHIA.

SMALL-POX and PITTING of Small Pox PREVENTED

A member of my family was taken with Small-pox. I used the Fluid; the patient was not delirious, was not pitted, and was about the house again in three weeks, and no others had it.—J. W. PARKINSON, Philadelphia.



Diphtheria Prevented.

The physicians here use Darbys Fluid very successfully in the treatment of Diphtheria.
A. STOLLENWERCK, Greensboro, Ala.

Tetter dried up.
Cholera prevented.
Ulcers purified and healed.
In cases of Death it should be used about the corpse—it will prevent any unpleasant smell.
The eminent Physician, J. MARION SIMS, M. D., New York, says: "I am convinced Prof. Darbys Prophylactic Fluid is a valuable disinfectant."

THE

Adjustable Spring Sash-Balance.

PATENTED JULY 16, 1878.

With this device Windows are balanced without the use of weights and cords, and therefore no long boxes on each side of the sash are required. The adjustment to each window according to the weight of its sash and glass by tightening or loosening of its spring is very simple. It is always easy of access to take out for any desirable adjustment, and is applicable to

ANY KIND OF WINDOWS, WHETHER NEW OR OLD STYLE,

Assisting in the opening and holding them at any point to which the lower sash may be raised, or the upper lowered, for the purpose of ventilation and comfort. The general testimony of those whose houses have been supplied with these fixtures for three years is that they are a great convenience, and SATISFACTION IS WARRANTED.

HEAD OF CENTRAL.

WEST PEABODY.—The meeting of the Club last Friday evening was devoted to the finishing up of the discussion on the town report. It was voted to adjourn the Club meetings to the first Friday of October, unless the Executive Committee should call a meeting in the intervening time, and also to hold the annual business meeting on the first Friday evening in December. It was further voted, on suggestion of Mr. Bowman Viles, that the proposed benefit to the Chorus Club be postponed to the first of next season, and that matter was left in the hands of Mr. Viles. Rev. Mr. Spaulding continued the discussion on the Town Report, referring to the tendency to extravagance in expenditures, and that important errors existed in the making up of the Report. He claimed the necessity of an auditor being employed by the town. He continued his charges against the management of the Alms House, that the inmates were not provided with good food, and thought $8.00 a year insufficient for clothing them. He also stated that he had heard on good authority that two human bodies were once stealthily brought to the Alms House, that they were boiled up in a rendering kettle, and that their bones were afterwards scraped by paupers of the House. He further expressed the opinion that in twenty-five years from now Peabody will have to seek a new supply, because by that time the water near Cedar Grove cemetery would be an open cesspool for the village which will surely grow up in that neighborhood after the introduction of the horse railroad. Mr. King denied the statements of Mr. Spaulding, claiming that the authority given by him for them was worthless, and that the paupers were well fed.

NORTH PEABODY.—Mr. Moses T. Kimball has purchased a farm in North Reading and will soon remove there.

Mr. D. W. Putnam offers his very desirable estate, on the corner of Andover and Prospect Street, for sale.

Mrs. E. S. Evans has completed quite an extensive henery.

The Felton Estate, on the corner of Prospect and Andover street, formerly owned by old squire Felton, but now by T. G. Osborn, Esq., is for sale.

Mr. G. H. Winchester has returned from his western tour, after pre-empting a homestead.

Mr. Moses T. Kimball offers his farm on Andover street for sale.

The estate of the late Derby Loftus is advertised for sale.

It is rumored that Mr. L. C. Hanson will soon leave for the west again.

Mrs. A. S. Cook offers her estate on the corner of Cross and Andover streets for sale.

W. P. Barker's estate on Andover street is for sale.

We are pleased to see our efficient lamplighter. Mr. Daniel H. Whipple, at his (lamp) post again, after his recent severe illness.

The Sam'l Blake place, now owned by James Pike, of the well known firm of Pike & Whipple, is for sale.

The store lately occupied by George Deland is for sale.

Mr. G. W. Wilson's land on Andover street is for sale. Z.

SOUTH PEABODY.—Joseph Basford is filling in and grading around his house.

Rev. J. W. Colwell exchanged pulpits with the pastor of the South Lynnfield church last Sunday.

The horse railroad track is laid as far as the Daniel Galeucia estate.

Daniel Haskell's house will be ready for occupancy about June 1st.

R. P. Brown has put two new ice teams on the road, one to run to Lynn and the other to Nahant.

PEABODY.

A private letter from Jefferson, N. H., says that "last Thanksgiving morning the writer went to the post office for his mail in a sleigh for the first time, and Sunday the 15th, he went out for the first time in a carriage, there having been good sleighing during all the intervening time."

Parties living on the lines of street mains already laid, who wish service pipes the coming season, should put in their applications now, and then they will not be likely to suffer so much delay in having their connections made as later in the season, when work on the new extension commences.

Miss Barrows of the Peabody High School, has been presented with a fine Mahogany Davenport writing desk by the Senior class, and the Rogers group, "The Favorite Scholar," by the middle class. Miss Barrows leaves with the kindest wishes of the scholars, as is evidenced by these tokens of affection.

Geo. F. Barnes has returned from New Hampshire, and is much improved in health. He states that he is gaining daily, and expects to resume his position in school next Monday.—The committee speak in terms of great praise of the labors of Miss Emerson, who has been supplying for Mr. Barnes.

Patrick Hanan, a young fellow about 16 years of age, living in this town and employed in a shoe factory in Lynn, got his thumb badly jammed last Wednesday in a shank forming machine. A doctor was called and although it was feared amputation would be necessary, he succeeded in dressing the thumb and hopes to save it.

The new cinderless locomotive, which has two fire boxes, one of which burns coal, and the other smoke and cinders, was given a trial trip over the Cape Ann branch of the Eastern, last week. A large number of railroad men accompanied the train. On the down trip, after leaving Beverly, the engine was speeded, and fairly flew over the line.

At a meeting of the School Committee last Monday evening, Miss Nellie R. Little, of Lewiston, Maine, was elected to fill the position in the High School made vacant by the resignation of Miss Barrows. Miss Little is a member of the Senior Class of Bates College, and brings the best of testimonials as to her ability. She will enter upon her duties to-morrow.

On account of the crowded condition of the Primary department of the Center School, the committee find it necessary to give notice that no more children can be received there at present, except those who can read and write. In the third Sub-Primary room there are now more than ninety pupils. An additional teacher will be employed in this room at once.

The marriage of King Upton, the eldest son of the late George Upton, and Miss Anna, daughter of Joseph F. Dane of Salem, took place last Wednesday evening. Mr. Upton has charge of the factory and business interests of his father, and the couple have taken a trip West, during which time Mr. Upton will attend to some business connected therewith.

The Lynn and Boston horse railroad company has purchased the house and lot owned by David Downs, west of their Wyoma stables, and are to erect an addition of 50 feet and otherwise improve the stables. The stables, when finished, will be 202 feet long, the longest owned by the company. They are to pave with square granite blocks in front of the building.

The Lynn & Boston Horse R. R. are making good progress this fine weather, and are laying in the neighborhood of 1000 feet at each end per day. The flat rails are all laid at this end, and they have commenced on the T. rails. It is stated that the fare to Lynn will be 12 cents; 5 tickets for 50 cents. The ground was broken this morning for the double track which is to be laid on Main street.

The annual meeting of the Boston Association of Universalists will be held in the Universalist Church in Haverhill, Thursday, May 3, opening at 9.30 A. M., and continuing during the day and evening. All parishes in Suffolk, Norfolk, Essex and Middlesex counties, are included in this Association. Rev. Dr. Bolles, of Salem, is announced as one of the speakers for the evening.

When the Lowell train left the depot for Lowell, last Friday evening, and reached the Central street crossing, a lady who wished to go to Danvers, thinking it was the Lawrence train, attempted to jump on the rear car. The train hurled her with great violence around and nearly under the wheels. She looked around much bewildered and came back to the depot, took the Lawrence train and went to Danvers.

Daniel T. Smith, the well known jeweler of Salem, has removed from his old store on the corner of Essex and Washington streets, to a temporary location, No. 288 Essex street, opposite Mechanic Hall, where he will be pleased to see his customers.

The pages of the PRESS to-day fairly teem with advertisements. The display is one of the largest we have ever had. Merchants are alive to the demands of the spring season. The weather has been a little backward, but business has been steadily improving. Sensible men take the earliest opportunity to catch the eye of the public and they will do it through the best medium he can find. We need not say that will be the PRESS.

The removal of the wheel at the Post Office and the substitution of boxes, seems to meet with general approval. The work of delivery is facilitated for both the Postmaster and the public. The wheel was a relic of old times, which the department is always pleased to know is out of the way.

A fire is raging in the vicinity of Frank Marsh's in the woods, and this afternoon Engineers Littlefield and Peirce, with about thirty men, have gone thither to help put it out. We understand the fire started yesterday, and was burning all last night.

J. G. LOWERY, 31 Washington street, Salem, is headquarters for all kinds of artists' materials, picture frames and moldings in large variety, also pictures of all kinds at reasonable prices. Remember the name, J. G. Lowery.

ALMY, BIGELOW & WEBBER are making some special prices in Carpets. And that is good news to the housekeeper. Call and see their immense stock, and see the great bargains they are offering in every department.

E. & C. WOODMAN of Danvers, have an advertisement in another column, which those of our readers who are interested in plants and shrubs, will find profitable reading.

Letters advertised May 2, Mrs. Johanna Ames, Warren Barker, John Cass, Maria L. Colby, Michael Carney, John Dailey, Kate Foley, Oliver Grant, Michael Lyons, Precilla J. Luvoy, Mrs. John McDonnell, Frank Marden, John McLuggan, John O'Donovan, Miss Smith, Patrick Whalen.

Z. A. GALLUP, Manager.

The superintendent of the Willows entered upon his duties Monday, and preparations are now being made for the season. It is expected that better facilities will be enjoyed for transportation thither, and that this year will surpass all previous ones. A number of new cottages have been built at Juniper Point, and others newly painted.

The following are the late real estate conveyances in Peabody: James Lannan by mortgagee to J. Pike, for $3173; Eben Sutton to I. J. Goodwin, for $250; John E. Herrick and others to F. E. Hood and others, for $1; Charles B. Farley, trustees, to M. F. Upton and others, trustees, for $1; Jeremiah McCartley to H. Kennedy, for $1100.

The Selectmen on Saturday granted the following additional licenses: William H. Baldwin, James Corbett, Jas. E. Millea, John Linehan, Hazen A. Spaulding, Patrick Wallace, Bartholomew Lawton, Patrick Mahoney, Bridget Noonan, William Mitchell. Several applicants were refused a license, and there are more to be acted upon.

Wednesday noon a man named Murphy, belonging in Peabody, fell overboard from Pickett's lower wharf. A line was thrown to him from the schooner Mattie F. Foster which was laying off the wharf, by which he was pulled on board the schooner and afterward landed on the wharf.—Beverly Citizen.

The boot and shoe trade is in a very healthy condition. A good degree of activity is manifested consistent with the season. There are about seventy buyers in Boston at present, and they are leaving a long list of orders for Fall goods. Great confidence is manifested in the chances for an excellent Fall trade.

The turn-table on the Square has been removed during the past week. We congratulate the Naumkeag Street Railway upon the discontinuance of the one horse cars, which this indicates, and the increased patronage of the road which it also signifies. Now if they will extend their rails up Central street, our people will be happy.

Poet's Corner.

She Would Be an Odd Fellow.

[As read with success by elocutionists at lodge entertainments and gatherings of the Order.]

The funniest thing I ever heard,
The funniest thing that ever occurred,
Is the story of Mrs. Mehitable Byrde,
Who wanted to be an Odd Fellow.

Her husband, Tom Byrde, an Odd, so true,
As good an Odd as any of you;
He is Guardian of Lodge No.—say 102,
And she wanted to be an Odd Fellow, too,
This ridiculous Mrs. Byrde.

She followed him round, this inquisitive wife,
And nagged him and teased him half out of his life;
So to terminate this unhallowed strife
He consented at last to admit her.
And first to disguise her from bonnet and shoon
This ridiculous lady agreed to put on
His breeches—ah! forgive me—I mean pantaloons;
And miraculously they did fit her.

The lodge was at work in the Initiatory degree,
And everything was ready to inflict misery;
The officers sat like Solomon, wise;
The brimstone burned amid horrid cries;
The goat roamed wildly through the room;
The candidate begged them to let him go home
And the Warden sat in deep meditation,
As the O. C. prepared for his machinations—
When in came Mrs. Byrde.

Oh, horrible sounds! oh, horrible sight!
Can it be that Odd Fellows take delight
In spending thus the hours of night?
Ah! could their wives and daughters know
The unutterable things they say and do,
Their feminine hearts would burst with woe!
But this is not all my story.

Those Odd Fellows joined in a hideous ring,
The candidate howling like anything,
And thus in tones of death they sing,
(The candidate's name was Morey):
"Blood to drink and bones to crack,
Skulls to smash and lives to take,
Hearts to crush and souls to burn,
Give old Morey another turn,
And make him grim and gory."

Trembling with horror stood Mrs. Byrde,
Unable to speak a single word.
She staggered and fell in the nearest chair
On the left of the Inside Guardian there,
And scarcely noticed, so loud the groans,
That the chair was made of human bones.

Of human bones! On grinning skulls
That ghastly throne of horror rolls,
Those skulls, the skulls that victims bore;
Those bones, the bones that victims wore.
A scalp across the top was flung,
His teeth around the arms were strung.
Never in all romance was known
Such uses made of human bone.

There came a pause—a pair of paws
Reached through the floor, up sliding doors,
And grabbed the unhappy candidate!
How can I, without tears, relate
The lost and ruined Morey's fate?
She saw him sink in a fiery hole,
She heard him scream, "My soul! my soul!"
While roars of fiendish laughter roll,
And drown the yells for mercy.
"Blood to drink," etc., etc.

The ridiculous woman could stand no more,
She fainted and fell on the blood-stained floor,
'Midst all the diabolical roar.
What then, you ask me, did befall
Mehitable Byrde? Why, nothing at all—
She dreamed she had been in an Odd Fellow's hall.

The Oldest Friend.

Oh, Life, my Life! 'tis many a year since we Took hands together and came through the morn,
When thou and Day and I were newly born—
And fair the future looked, and glad and free,
A year as long as whole Eternity,
And full of roses with no stinging thorn,
And full of joys that could not be outworn;
And time was measureless for thee and me.

Long have we fared together, thou and I:
Thou hast grown dearer, as old friends must grow:
Small wonder if I dread to say good-by
When our long past is over, and I go
To enter strange, new worlds beyond the sky
With Death, thy rival, to whom none saith "No."

—Louise Chandler Moulton, in Harper's.

Selected Story.

The Wife of our New Minister.

There had been a pastoral change in our congregation. The people, after a ten years' trial of good old Mr. Wharton, and his amiable, compliant wife, came to the conclusion that a different kind of preacher, with a different kind of wife, would vastly improve their spiritual condition. There was a lack of strength about Mr. Wharton, (so it was alleged,) and certain prominent ladies in the church had wished (aloud) so often that Mrs. Wharton were less old-fashioned in her ways, that change, sooner or later, had come to be a settled thing in the minds of a majority. It was simply a question of time; and time settled the question. The change was made. Old Mr. Wharton and his wife retired, and Rev. Mr. Newton and his wife took their places in the pastorate of the congregation—I say "Mr. Newton and his wife," for our people think, or used to think, that, when they "hired a minister," they hired his wife also, and regarded her duties among them in quite as high a light as they did the duties of her husband.

I happened to be away from the village at the time this change was made, and did not return until after Mr. Newton and his wife had been doing duty for something over three months.

"How do you like the new minister?" was the first of my inquiries.

"He's a charming preacher," was the reply I received on every hand. Yet I saw, by the manner of my friends, that some drawback existed.

"How do you like his wife?"

Ah! The little mystery was explained. Mr. Newton was well enough. But his wife!

"What kind of a woman is she?" I asked.

"Don't know. Can't make her out," was the vague answer received.

"Is she anything like Mrs. Wharton?"

"O dear, no! I only wish she was. Why, she doesn't take a particle of interest in the church. Hasn't been to one of the monthly concerts for prayer; nor to the weekly sewing-circle; nor even to the Sabbath school. We calculated entirely on her taking the senior girls' class which Mrs. Wharton taught for so many years; and a committee of ladies waited on her with an invitation to do so, but she actually declined, saying that she had neither taste nor aptitude for teaching! Now, what do you think of that for a minister's wife! did you ever hear the beat of it?"

I saw at a glance that there was trouble ahead,—for Miss Phœbe Lane, who made me this communication, was an active "circulating medium" in the congregation. She knew everybody's business, talked to everybody, and acted as opinion-maker to a large majority of ladies who had too much to do in their families to have time for independent thinking in church matters.

I must confess that I felt a sort of liking for Mrs. Newton on this representation of Miss Lane. Mrs. Wharton had been such a pliant subject in the hands of my spinster friend, and a few like her, that an involuntary respect was created for a minister's wife, who, in coming among us, could from the beginning show that she had an individuality of her own, and meant to hold on by it.

Two or three days' intercourse with the members of the congregation satisfied me that Mrs. Newton would not do for the Church of St. Charity. When and where this church was sainted I have never learned. I have my suspicion that Miss Phœbe Lane, who rechristened the parish on the occasion of building our new church, was not particularly well read in the Saintish Calendar. But let that pass. Ours was the Church of St. Charity. Mr. Newton was a delightful man! So active in all the interests of the society! So pious! So humble-minded! But his wife! No woman could be less suited to her condition. It was even doubted whether she were a professor! Phœbe Lane was positive in regard to it; and averred that she didn't believe there was a spark of piety in her soul. How a man like Mr. Newton could ever have mated himself with such a wife was regarded by Miss Lane as one of the inexplicable mysteries. "A man like Mr. Newton, who might have had his choice among women!"

I went to church with no ordinary feeling of interest, on the Sabbath following my return. Whether my leading impulses were of the earth, earthy, or of heaven, heavenly, I will not stop to question. Five minutes before the time for service to begin, a lady, just above medium height, beautifully formed, and with a step of blended grace and dignity, passed along the aisle, leading a child by the hand, and took her seat in the minister's pew. Though not in any sense gaily attired, there was a style and air about her that by no means indicated a pious disregard of worldly things. Taste had evidently presided at her toilet. I noticed a slight flutter running through the congregation, and the turning of many heads toward the minister's pew, which occupied the most prominent place in the church. The lady did not look around her, nor show the slightest sign of interest in the people. How different, in all things, was her appearance and bearing from that of good, kind, compliant Mrs. Wharton, whose pleasant, almost smiling face I had seen for so many years in that pew—a face turning, as by instinct, its mild sunlight ever and anon upon the congregation, while her husband broke for them the Bread of Life!

The contrast was hardly agreeable.

"She'll never do!" whispered a lady-shadow of Miss Lane's, bending to my ear from the pew just behind the one I occupied. "Proud as Lucifer, any one can see! Such airs won't do for St. Charity."

I made no reply. Though annoyed, I was yet sensibly influenced by the remark.

Very still, almost like a statue, sat Mrs. Newton, the minister's wife, and I could see that the child, a little girl six or seven years old, leaned very close to her. How I wished that she would turn toward the congregation! How I longed to see her face! But I was not granted this desire until after the morning's services were closed.

I was particularly pleased with Mr. Newton. His sermon, in contrast with the usual discourses I had listened to from the lips of Mr. Wharton, was a master-piece of eloquence. No one seemed to listen to him with more rapt attention than Mrs. Newton.

At last the services closed, and the time came when my restless curiosity was to be satisfied. The minister's wife turned her face to the congregation, and I had a view of every feature. It was a face, once seen, to be remembered. Classic almost to severity in its outline, the full lips and soft hazel eyes gave to it a gentle expression. You saw at a glance that she was a woman of thought as well as feeling.

A few ladies gathered around her as she stepped from the pew, and I noticed that her countenance lit up very pleasantly as she spoke to them. But there was nothing obsequious; no undue familiarity, no wordy affability. A certain air of dignity and self-respect marked every attitude of her person, and every expression of her countenance. All vulgar familiarity toward her was out of the question—I saw that at a glance.

But only a few ladies in the congregation ventured to approach her. In the eyes of many she was proud, and they were not "going to force themselves upon her notice." The prejudice admitted into their minds by others made them shun rather than court her acquaintance. Of the few who did notice her, some were attracted by affinity, and some by a desire to gain a little reflected importance. Others thought it but hospitable to show her attentions, as a stranger among them, and acted accordingly; though the force-work was apparent. Desiring to meet her and make her acquaintance, I asked to be introduced, and was presented by a friend. I thought her reception rather cold; and after passing a formal word or two, moved past her to speak to an old acquaintance whom I had not met for some time.

"How do you like our new minister's wife?" was almost the first question.

"Can't say. Must know something about her first," I answered.

"She'll not do for us?" said my friend warmly. "She's not the woman for St. Charity!"

"What's the defect?" I inquired.

"It's all defect!" was the sweeping reply. "Just look at her! A pretty thing for a minister's wife, indeed! Why, she carries herself with the air of a queen!"

"Mr. Newton," said I, "is a cheering speaker. I never heard a more beautiful sermon!"

"O, Mr. Newton is splendid!" replied my acquaintance, warmly. "But his wife! O, dear! it's dreadful! What could have possessed him to marry such a woman! She'll never suit us in the world—never, never! Why, I don't believe she's even a professor. She didn't stay to the communion on last Sunday! Just think of that—and she the minister's wife! It's been the talk of the congregation ever since! We fully expected her to take a class in the Sunday school—but no! We invited her to be present at our sewing-circle—but no; she couldn't leave her children! A mere excuse, of course! Then we elected her President of our Indian Missionary Society; but she declined the honor, saying that she had neither time nor taste for such public duties; that with her charity, for the present, must begin at home. Now isn't that a Christian spirit for you; our minister's wife to talk of charity beginning at home! Why, she's a heathen!"

My church acquaintance waxed warm.

"Some of our people were eager enough to get rid of dear, good Mrs. Wharton," she added. "She wasn't bright and fashionable enough for them; but I rather think they've got their dose now!"

I met, here and there, a lady of our church, who belonged to the home-duty mind-your-own-business class, who did not join in this hue and cry against Mrs. Newton; who thought that, if she had neither taste nor inclination for Sabbath school teaching, sewing-circles or missionary societies, the congregation should not interfere with these peculiarities. She had three little children, to whom she gave all a mother's care; and as the slender income which her husband derived from the parish of St. Charity (four hundred a year and the parsonage) would warrant her to keep only a single domestic, a large part of her time had, necessarily, to be given to household duties. "Nobody can say," remarked one of these ladies, in my hearing, "that she neglects her children, or wastes her husband's income. The little parsonage has never looked so attractive inside or out as now. Mrs. Wharton was not tidy, as we all know, and things around her were generally at sixes and sevens. And as for her children, they were always neglected. Many times have I seen them playing in the dirt while their mother was at the sewing-circle, or somewhere else that she had no business to be."

But the ladies who talked in this way belonged to the "queer" ones of the congregation. They were not of the pious kind. So all they said went for nothing with the many.

Without "variableness or shadow of turning," as St. Paul says, did Mrs. Newton keep on her way. Home was her parish, and she was content to do her duty there. Occasionally she accepted an invitation to take tea and spend an evening abroad; but in most cases declined these pleasant entertainments, and though over three months had passed, there had yet been no tea-drinking at the parsonage. Mr. Newton, on the other hand, mingled very freely with his congregation—sat with them at their tables, and joined them in their gatherings. Of course the absence of Mrs. Newton on these occasions always formed a subject of remark; and it was generally voted that her failure to accompany her husband seriously marred the pleasures of the evening.

"Ah, if his wife were only like him!"

This was invariably the sighing ejaculation of Miss Phœbe Lane, or some one of her party.

At last the matter assumed so serious a shape in the minds of certain leading ladies in the parish, that it was determined to wait upon Mrs. Newton, and remonstrate with her on the course of conduct she was pursuing—"a course of conduct," urged Miss Lane, "that is working untold injury in our church. Ever since she came here a change for the worse has been going on in the congregation. Members are growing cold or indifferent. Our sewing-circles are losing their interest, the monthly concerts of prayer are badly attended, and the Sabbath school is dwindling away. The social sphere, always so warm and attractive under the genial influence of good Mrs. Wharton, is fast losing its power—and all from this strange conduct on the part of our minister's wife. She must be talked to on the subject! If she doesn't know her duty, she must be taught it. If she won't hear her husband, she must hear the congregation."

A committee of ladies—Miss Lane at the head of them, and voluntary spokeswoman—finally undertook to set Mrs. Newton right in regard to her duties to the parish of St. Charity, and formally waited upon her for that purpose. Curiosity prompted me to accept an offered membership in that committee. Let me picture the interview with Mrs. Newton.

We found her sitting in her orderly arranged little parlor, her person as neat as everything around her, and her three children as sweet and pure as May blossoms. Two were playing on the floor, and the babe slept in the cradle, that was drawn so close to the mother that she could touch the rocker, if needed, with her foot. She was sewing on a shirt for her husband. Four ladies made up the committee—a formidable number. Mr. Newton was away, attending the funeral of a poor laborer's child—so the coast was clear, and the culprit in our power.

With an easy grace the minister's wife received us, and after we were all seated, she stepped to the door and spoke to her girl, who was in the kitchen. A smart, tidy-looking domestic came forward, and Mrs. Newton said to her, with a kindness of manner that I could not help noticing,

"Take Aggy and George into the garden, Jane, and keep them till I call you."

"Yes, ma'am." The girl spoke very cheerfully. The two children sprung up instantly from the floor, and bounding from the room, left us alone with Mrs. Newton and her sleeping baby.

A grave silence followed. The committee was embarrassed, but the minister's wife was entirely at her ease.

"We have come" said Miss Lane, after sundry preliminary throat clearings and bridling motions of the head peculiar to herself, "to have a little conversation with you about our church matters."

"Hadn't you better talk on that subject with my husband?" was answered, with the utmost self-composure. "It is his particular province."

"No, ma'am," said Miss Lane, her voice gaining emphasis; "we have no fault to find with Mr. Newton. He does his part entirely to our satisfaction."

"O! I understand." Mrs. Newton spoke as if light were breaking into her mind.

"Yes, ma'am," Miss Lane went on, "it is your duty in the church that we have come to talk about, not your husband's; and I hope you will not take it ill of us if we speak out plainly."

"Not by any means," replied Mrs. Newton. I noticed a slight quiver in her voice, a slight flushing of her cheeks, and a brightening of her soft, hazel eyes. But it was plain that she was fully self-possessed, and in no way intimidated by this unexpected citation to answer for delinquencies.

"Not by any means," she repeated. "Speak out plainly, and if in any thing I have been derelict, I will confess my fault, and do all I can to lead a better life."

"Plain speaking is always best," said our mouth-piece, oracularly. "So we will speak plainly. The fact is, Mrs. Newton, you have failed almost entirely to meet the expectations of our people."

"Indeed! I am grieved to learn this." Mrs. Newton spoke seriously, but with no sign of disturbance. "I was not before aware that the people had any special claims upon me."

"No special claims upon you!" Miss Lane uttered the words in undisguised astonishment. "No special claims!" she repeated, "and you the wife of our minister!"

"What do you expect of me?" calmly inquired Mrs. Newton.

"We have already intimated our expectations in various ways. There is the girl's senior class in Sunday school; that, of course, we expected you to take. And you are wanted on the Visiting Committee and in our Missionary Society. Unless our minister's wife takes the lead in the temporalities of the church, nothing will prosper."

"Then," said Mrs. Newton, "it is understood that while my husband's duties relate mainly to the spiritualities of the church, mine have special regard to its temporalities."

"Certainly, ma'am! You have expressed the difference of relation exactly," replied Miss Lane, led on by the peculiar way in which Mrs. Newton put the question to admit the existence of a very wide range of duties as required of that lady by the congregation of St. Charity.

"This is all new to me, ladies," said the minister's wife. "I was not aware before that any one in the congregation regarded me as having failed in duty."

"Every one so regards you." Our spokeswoman was a personage who used great plainness of speech.

"This should have been stated in the beginning," said Mrs. Newton. "How was I to know your views in the matter? I saw all of my husband's correspondence, but not a word was said about his wife or the parish requirements in her case. Now it appears that her range of duties is almost as wide as his. I ought to have known this before I came here, ladies; and I really think the complaint of failure in duty is against you instead of me. Let me ask, so as to reach a clear understanding of this matter, what salary you pay your minister's wife?"

"Salary!" gasped Miss Lane, her under jaw falling, and her eyes projecting at least a quarter of an inch beyond their ordinary position. "Salary!" she repeated, in a bewildered, half-confounded way.

"Yes," quietly replied Mrs. Newton. "The salary. You do not, of course, require the services of your minister's wife in the way you propose without compensation."

"Preposterous!" Miss Lane had recovered herself, and gained a little blind indignation with her partial self-possession. "Did any one ever hear of a thing so absurd? In hiring your husband for our minister—"

"You did not hire me!" interrupted Mrs. Newton with calm dignity. "Bear that in mind, if you please."

"Thank you for the remark, Mrs. Newton," said I, coming almost involuntarily to her aid. "It throws a flood of light upon the whole subject. True as Gospel! We did not hire you, and have no claim upon a single hour of your time. All that the church of St. Charity have a right to ask of you is, that you do your duty as a wife and mother."

Mrs. Newton turned to me with a grateful look, and grasping my hand, said,

"Thank you!" in return.

A little while she paused; but no one spoke in the deep silence. I think some wholesome convictions of truth were finding their way even into the mind of Miss Lane, who, somehow, reminded me of a wilted leaf, or a piece of stiffly starched muslin suddenly drenched with water.

"My husband's duties are clear," very evenly spoke Mrs. Newton—very kindly, yet very firmly and very lucidly. "My husband's duties are clear. He has come to you as a spiritual guide and instructor. His office is to point to Heaven and lead the way. It is a high and holy office. I honor him in it, and sustain him to the best of my ability. My duties are also clear. I am simply a wife and mother; and, God being my helper, I will faithfully discharge a wife and mother's sacred obligations.

At present these duties take up all my time; and conscience will not permit me to neglect real duties for the performance of imaginary ones. In doing such duties, I best serve the church. This is my religion, and I have learned it from the Bible."

She paused for a few moments. No one replying to her remarks, she went on:

"It has been alleged that I am not pious enough for the people here. Perhaps not. But of one thing you may be certain; I am no hypocrite. I shall never put on a pious exterior to hide the want of charity in my heart. As I am, you will always see me."

Mrs. Newton paused again; but as none of her visitors showed any inclination to speak, she continued.

"My religion is somewhat peculiar, I believe. I do not keep it as a showy Sunday suit, but wear it every day. My essential worship consists in a daily discharge of my duty as a wife and mother; my formal worship, in the pious prostration of body and spirit before my Heavenly Father at set times, either in my closet or in the public assembly. The Sabbath, to me, is the golden clasp that binds together the circle of weekly duties. It is a blessing and a consolation, just in the degree that the worship of my six days has been essential worship."

"And are we to expect nothing of our minister's wife?" said Miss Lane, in a very subdued voice. She was evidently conscious of having made a great mistake in her estimate of Mrs. Newton's character.

"Nothing more than her duty as a woman. If she have qualities that will give her a leading social influence, and have time to spare from home duties—which are always first—she ought to let these qualities become active for good. But no more can, with justice, be required of her than from any other woman in the congregation. Your contract for service is with her husband, and not with her; and you have no more just claim upon her time, nor right to control her freedom, than you have over the wife of your lawyer, doctor, or school-master. It is this mistaken idea of the people in regard to minister's wives that is producing so much trouble in societies, and making wretched the lives of hundreds of poor women, who hardly dare say that their souls are their own. It is not enough that the minister's wife is expected to keep her house and clothe her children upon the lowest range of income, that will not allow her competent help, but she must spend half of her time in gossiping around among the idle or well-to-do ladies of the congregation—take part in their sewing circles, and attend all their various meetings for good or doubtful purposes. Now all this is wrong; and if you are not satisfied with my husband, because I will not imitate so bad an example, you must give him notice accordingly; or, if you think my services absolutely essential to the prosperity of the church, just state the amount of salary you can afford to give, and if, for the sum, I can procure a person in every way as competent as myself to assume the charge of my children and household, I will take into serious consideration your proposition. Beyond this, ladies, I can promise nothing."

"Thank you again, my dear madam," said I, with a warmth that expressed my real feelings, "for giving this matter its right solution. You have spoken out like a true, independent woman, as you are, and I will see that your views are correctly reported. Consider me as your friend."

She turned upon me a grateful look, and, as she did so, I could see that my earnest words had brought a dimming moisture to her eyes.

"I could wish," she answered, in a lower voice, "to number you all as my friends. I have come among you as a stranger, seeking no pre-eminence, but only desiring to do my duty as a woman, side by side with other women. The fact that my husband is your minister, gives me of right no position among you, and gives you no right to demand of me any public service. If my husband fails in his duty, admonish him; but, in the name of justice and humanity, do not establish any supervision over me. Let my private life be as sacred from intrusion as that of any other woman. This I have a right to demand, and I will be satisfied with nothing less."

Silenced, if not convinced, was Miss Phœbe Lane, and she retired in due time with her committee of remonstrance and accusation, their colors trailing upon the ground. I lost no time in giving my history of the interview; repeating almost word for word the clear, strong language of Mrs. Newton, that she might have the full benefit of her own statement of the case. And I am happy to say that there was common sense enough and right feeling enough in the parish of St. Charity to do her ample justice. Her husband is still our minister, active, useful and beloved; but as no salary has yet been set apart for his wife, she has not assumed any duties in the congregation, and from present appearances, I think, has no intention of doing so. But as a wife and mother her life is beautiful; and her example of far more benefit to the people under her husband's care than all her more public acts could be, had she entered upon every duty that was so generously assigned to her.—Harper's Monthly Magazine.

A recently pardoned convict from the State prison gives Warden Usher a good certificate of character, and confers the same favor upon Gov. Butler. Both those public functionaries are duly grateful, we suppose. As to Warden Earle, he was "brutal," this convict informs us, and as it has come to this, that the evidence of criminals, street-walkers and other foul birds, is sufficient to blacken the good name of respectable citizens, we shall be obliged to believe all that this pardoned individual tells us. He was let out, by the way, because it was supposed that he was going to die in a day or two, but he now says he is "going to lead a good life!" He will live long enough, probably, to vote for Butler next fall. —Cambridge Press.

Steamer Pilgrim, the Old Colony line's recent addition to its fleet of floating palace hotels, has occupied conspicuous window honors on Washington street, Boston, the past week. The figures attached to the portrait of the handsome craft hardly give an idea of its size. Washington street, in its down-town precincts at least, would be little more than half wide enough to admit of its passage, and if anchored on that thoroughfare its symmetrical length would extend from the Old South Church almost to the middle of Franklin street.

"Trying to do business without advertising," remarks an exchange, "is like winking at a girl in the dark. You may know what you are doing but nobody else does." Trying to cure Catarrh by the use of snuffs and irritating liquid injections is the height of folly also. The disease will never be cured by such treatment. Moreover, the delicate lining membranes of the nasal organs will, sooner or later, become inflamed and diseased by such irritants. Ely's Cream Balm is not a snuff or liquid, and is easily applied. Its effects are pleasant, rapid and thorough. No case of Catarrh or cold in the head can withstand its effects. "I could scarcely speak," says J. O. Tichenor, dealer in boots and shoes, Elizabeth, N. J., "It was almost impossible to breathe through my nostrils, on account of Catarrh. Ely's Cream Balm cured me in a short time." All druggists sell it at 50 cents.

Mr. Frederick Paulding, the son of an officer in the regular army, has lately had some mishaps in his chosen path of the dramatic profession. Only the other day an actress recovered a large sum from him in a suit at law for wages accruing after her premature discharge by him from his company; and now, in his enthusiasm as Romeo, he has nearly killed with his sword the unfortunate player who was enacting Tybalt. Realism such as this last is carried to extremes far too great to make acting an enjoyable profession.—New York Sun.

Dramatic and Musical.

At the Boston Theatre there will be seen this week for the first time Lecocq's spectacular opera, "Heart and Hand." The work has met with cordial appreciation wherever it has been brought out in proper style. Manager J. C. Duff's Standard Opera Company seems to have been particularly successful elsewhere, having recently concluded a brilliant engagement in Chicago, and doubtless the Boston public will not be less appreciative. The organization includes over seventy people, an orchestra of thirty, with a full brass band for effect in the stage scenes, and in the third act a Hungarian ballet.

This week the famous Union Square Theatre Co., of New York, appears at the Park Theatre in "Rantzaus, or Love's Lesson:" a play that has met with great success at the home theatre. The company will produce later "A Parisian Romance," and other attractions. The Union Square Company is one of the best stock companies on the stage.

"Hearts of Oak," with James A. Herne, Miss Catherine Corcoran, and a strong company, is the attraction at the Globe Theatre this week and next. It is a strong play.

Harry M'Glenen's benefit at the Boston Theatre this afternoon.

Mr. William Redmund, the leading man at the Boston Theatre, will sail for Liverpool in the Republic to-morrow. He returns June 14 in the Germania, and will at once resume his position as leading man in the company where he has made himself so popular. He is to open at McVicker's Theatre, Chicago, July 2.

The same old story of success is still to be told regarding the Bijou.—"Pounce & Co.," so brightly given by the Collier-Rice company, is attracting highly appreciative audiences. Scenery and costumes are elegant; the performance is given with the utmost spirit, and it would be difficult to improve in any essential respect upon the presentation. "Pounce & Co." can be seen again and again with pleasure.—Indeed, more than a single hearing is needed to appreciate the beauties of the score.

The entertainment of the Schubert Club, at Plummer Hall on Friday evening, was a great success in every sense. If the unique programme had not intimated that the performers were amateurs, the audience would have considered them stars. The "Washwoman of Culture" in the operetta was as near perfection as could well be conceived. The singing was very finely done, particularly the duet by "Hardbake" and "Angelina."

Denman Thompson appeared at the Peabody Institute, last Thursday evening, under the management of Mr. H. Brooks Hooper, to a good house. This remarkable play does not seem to lack appreciative auditors, and crowded houses have greeted Mr. Thompson wherever he has appeared.

The sensational play of "Mardo," at Mechanic Hall, Friday night, served to introduce Frank Frayne and his performing animals. There was a good attendance and great applause at his scenes of courage and daring.

Joseph Murphy comes to Salem once more to-morrow, and will appear in "Kerry Gow," a play which will never wear out so long as Joe Murphy interprets it. The following from the Philadelphia News will no doubt be applicable to the performance: "Mr. Murphy has never had a more attentive, a more delighted audience than greeted him last night, and followed him in perfect sympathy through all his trials and adventures, his manly wooing of Norah, his blundering approaches to Norah's father to reveal the state of his heart, his arrest, imprisonment, escape, his horseshoeing business, and so on to the end. The play is full of the keenest repartee, which kept the people in a roar of laughter. As most readers know, it has some telling situations, and Mr. Murphy, while he shines in comedy, does ample justice to the pathetic scenes, and likewise sings several tender old songs in a tuneful tenor voice."

The ware manufactured at the Beverly pottery receives extremely favorable mention in the columns of several recent Australia papers. That speaks well for Mr. C. A. Lawrence, the proprietor, who was formerly of this place.

The depot at Swampscott is next to receive the attention of the Eastern Railroad. It will be thoroughly repainted and a ticket office built outside on the track side to Boston. All these conveniences will be appreciated by the Swampscott people, as the repairs at our own depot are by our citizens.

One of the most prominent features of the dry-goods market has been the settling down of prices of some makes of bleached sheetings, which has led to a little more activity in that line. On the leading brands of brown and bleached goods there is no change, and makes that are sold ahead are on a stronger basis, in sympathy with the rise in cotton.

SPRING

OPENING.

WM. S. BUTLER & CO.

Take pleasure in announcing that the alterations in their store are now completed, and that they are occupying Nos. 90, 92, 94, 96, and 98 Tremont Street, and 1 and 2 Montgomery Place.

The second floor is now also open for business, and on the third floor is a Ladies' Reception Room, where every attention will be given to the comfort of our customers.

These alterations will give us much-needed additional room for the display of our stock, and will afford to the ladies Better Accommodations and Light than are found in any other store in our line.

FIRST

OPENING

— OF OUR —

DEPARTMENT.

In order to place this department at once in rank with any first-class millinery establishment, we have secured the best talent to be had to give our Hats that beauty and elegance which is consistent with refined taste, at popular prices to suit all trade.

The success of such a department has never been tried in this city, a department where STYLISH TRIMMED HATS are sold at but small advance on the cost of hat and trimmings, and we trust that the ladies of Boston and vicinity will avail themselves of the opportunity to leave their orders early, so they can receive proper attention.

OPENING

— OF OUR —

COTTON UNDERWEAR DEP'T.

In order to place this department properly before the public, we shall offer at less than cost our inaugurating sale, as follows:—

Lot 1. Chemises, Drawers, Corset Covers, for Ladies and Children, at 25c. each.

Lot 2. Chemises, Drawers, Skirts, Night Dresses, Hamburg trimmed, at 50c each.

Lot 3. The same, at 75c.

Lot 4. The same, at $1.00.

We refrain from giving a description of each and every article, and prefer giving good cloth and good trimmings to advertising the different clusters of tucks etc., and showing a poor article.

We hope ladies will avail themselves of this sale, as we shall not feel able to continue it for any length of time.

OPENING

— OF OUR —

STRAW GOODS

DEPARTMENT.

This department has been placed at the rear part of our store, and has been made the most attractive place in Boston.

The department faces a sheet of mirror, 50 feet in length and 9 feet in height, so as to give every opportunity to the purchaser to see at a glance whether a hat is becoming or otherwise.

The following New Shapes will be offered at our opening: The Critic, Fedora, Iolanthe, Mignon, Poppy, Patti, Thursby, Nautilus, Casino, Sprite, Marquise, Servia, and many others.

Horse Cars pass our door from all railroad stations, a great convenience to our out-of-town patrons.

ASSESSORS' NOTICE.

To the Inhabitants and other Persons liable to pay Taxes in the Town of Peabody.

The Assessors of the Town of Peabody hereby give notice to the Inhabitants of said town, and all other persons liable to pay taxes therein, that their office will be open on and after the first day of May until and including the first day of June, and all persons liable to be taxed in said town are hereby required to bring in at the said office true and perfect lists of all the polls (males twenty years old, and upward), and schedules and estimates of the personal estates for which they are liable to pay taxes.

Copartnerships

having a place of business in Peabody, and also in some other city or town within the Commonwealth, are especially notified to bring in a statement in accordance with the 24th section of the 11th chapter of the Public Statutes. Shipping and business income are not taxable to a firm, but each resident partner must include these items in his individual return.

Mortgaged Real Estate.

"Any mortgagor or mortgagee of real estate may bring in to the assessors of the town or city where such real estate lies," within the time specified in this notice, "a statement, under oath, of the amount due on each separate lot or parcel of such real estate, and the name and residence of every holder of an interest therein as a mortgagee or mortgagor. When such property is situated in two or more places, or when a recorded mortgage includes for one sum two or more estates or parts of an estate, an estimate of the amount of the mortgagee's interest in each estate or part of an estate shall be given in such statement." [Chap. 175 of the Acts of 1882]. When a statement in conformity with the law above quoted is brought in, the real estate therein returned will be assessed under sections 14, 15 and 16, of chapter 11 of the Public Statutes. But in cases where the mortgagor of the real estate has agreed in writing to pay all taxes assessed thereon, NO STATEMENT OR RETURN IS REQUIRED from either mortgagee or mortgagor, unless requested by the assessors in writing.

Estates in Trust.

Persons holding estates in trust, whether for minors or otherwise, are particularly requested to furnish the assessors with statements in relation to such estates. When trust estates, or estates of persons deceased, have been divided during the past year or have changed hands from other causes, the trustee, executor or administrator, or other person interested, is required and warned to give notice of such change; and in default of such notice, will be held to pay the tax assessed, although such estate has been wholly distributed and paid over.

Any person bringing in a list of all his taxable personal property will be assessed upon the valuation thereof, and any one neglecting to furnish the assessors with such list within the time above specified will be doomed at a legal meeting of the Board of Assessors, agreeably to the law of the Commonwealth. All persons will take notice that statements of personal property must be in writing, and subscribed under oath before one of the Assessors, at their office, on or before the FIRST DAY OF JUNE, and that the personal property of all taxable persons must be estimated by the Board, NOTWITHSTANDING A VERBAL STATEMENT OR INFORMAL WRITTEN COMMUNICATION TO ANY ONE OR MORE OF THE ASSESSORS. [Pub. Stat., chap. 11, sec. 29 and 41.] When a person has failed to bring in a list or schedule of all his taxable property, in conformity to this notice, no abatement of a tax so assessed upon such person for personal property can be granted, "unless such tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the amount which would have been assessed to that person on personal estate, if he had seasonably brought in said list; and if said tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent the said amount, the abatement shall be only of the excess above the said fifty per cent. [Pub. Stat., Chap. 11, Sec. 73.]

Any person taxable in Peabody for personal property can obtain a BLANK SCHEDULE for making a list of such property, with directions for properly filling the same, by applying at the assessors' office.

Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations.

The attention of the Officers of all Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations, located in Peabody, is particularly called to the requirements of Chapter 217 of the Acts of 1882, as the property of said corporations, both personal and real, will be subject to taxation unless the law is complied with. Blank forms for the purpose can be had at the office of the assessors.

BOARD OF HEALTH REGULATIONS.

THE Board of Health appointed by the Town hereby make and publish, as required by law,* the following "Regulations for the Public Health and Safety."—

REGULATION 1ST. It being the duty of the Board of Health, of the Town of Peabody, to make such examination of the premises of persons residing in said town as they shall deem necessary for the public welfare, the Board hereby give notice and require that all premises within said limits shall be ready for inspection by the Board on and after June 1st, 1883.

REGULATION 2D. No house offal, filthly water, dead animals or refuse of any kind, shall be thrown upon the streets by any resident; and no butcher, fishmonger, or vender of merchandise, shall leave any refuse upon the streets of this town.

REGULATION 3D. If, upon inspection, any rubbish, offal, decaying animal or vegetable matter, or filth of any kind be found in, under or about any building, within any yard or enclosure, upon any premises, or in the ponds or water courses of said Town of Peabody, or if any privy or drain be found so discharging as to prove a nuisance, and offensive or deleterious to the public health, the owner or occupant of such property or premises shall be notified by the Board to remove or abate such nuisance within 24 hours after said notice has been served.

REGULATION 4TH. If any owner or occupant of property as aforesaid, after having been duly notified, shall neglect to comply with the requirements of the above section, the Board of Health shall cause any and all nuisances to be removed or abated at the expense of the owner or occupants.

REGULATION 5TH. No hogs or goats shall be kept within the limits of this town, except in pastures, or in enclosures kept free from standing water, and regularly and freely disinfected.

REGULATION 6TH. It shall be the duty of occupants of dwellings in which any person or persons may be sick with small pox, and Physicians attending such cases of small pox, forthwith to notify the Board of Health of the fact.

REGULATION 7TH. The occupants of buildings or dwellings where small pox exists, or has existed, shall prohibit and prevent the removal of clothes, bedding and upholstering, or other articles from the infected buildings or dwellings, except the removal is made by permission, or under direction of the Board of Health.

REGULATION 8TH. The occupants of buildings or dwellings where Scarlet Fever and Diphtheria exist shall withdraw all children attending school from the same; and the teachers of said schools shall not allow children thus withdrawn to re enter the school until they shall present a certificate from the attending Physician vouching for the safety thereof.

REGULATION 9TH. Night soil carts shall not be allowed to pass through the streets in the thickly settled portions of the town between sunrise and sunset, from May 1st to Nov 1st, without a special permit from the Board of Health.

These Regulations will be Strictly Enforced.

JOHN P. FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers

IN THE literature regarding the Tewksbury Alms House, which is becoming very prolific, we hope none of our readers will fail to read the report of Mrs. Clara T. Leonard, who was appointed by the State Board of Lunacy and Charity, who have the charge temporarily of that institution, to investigate the care of the sick and insane there. It is all the more valuable because she cannot be accused, being a woman, of writing for political effect, and because her experience, long and valuable as it is, cannot be gainsayed. She does not find everything to approve there, but in the main carefully and well managed. She found the old women's and old men's wards "very cheerful and comfortable, and the occupants contented," the men's hospital not so well, owing to a lack of attendants. In regard to the fare she says: "I think the curable patients would recover better at Tewksbury if they had better and more tempting fare. A great want for the sick is a sick kitchen for each of the two hospitals, male and female, such as is in use at the Sherborn prison and at Monson, with a special cook, where food is prepared more suitably than in the great common kitchen. But the appropriation is too scanty to admit of this. It is evident that $108.68 per annum is a small sum for the support of an able-bodied man or woman. It will provide bare necessaries of life, food, clothing, warmth and shelter. Yet this is what was the cost per capita at Tewksbury last year."

Mrs. Leonard does not hesitate to say that the physician, Dr. Lathrop, is incompetent for his position, but she insists very forcibly that the faults of management are due to lack of attendance, and also that many of the incompetent ones are as good as can be obtained with the means at their command. She also shows the expense of supporting the inmates to be far less than in the alms houses of the several towns and cities, and concludes, viz.:— "It is easy, when it is sought, to produce a certain impression rather than to know the truth—to take exceptional instances as general conditions — to show all of the evils and none of the good—to base falsehoods upon a slender foundation of truth. This is the most dangerous form of slander—and this is what has been done at Tewksbury; and probably many good people to-day believe that people with foul diseases bathe in the same water as others —which is utterly false; that nurses beat and ill-treat sick women; that people have short allowance of bad food, when food is abundant and good, though too coarse for the sick and feeble, for the most part. Tender hearts ache to think of the suffering there, when, in their own town, the paupers never were half so comfortable or well cared for as people have been for the past few years at the state alms house. Most of the abuses at Tewksbury belong to past years, and have been gradually reformed. I speak of it as I have known it since my first visit there April 15, 1881. We deal with things as they are. Like all human institutions, I think it can be improved, but gradually and by temperate and well considered action."

We submit that these words are worth more to the people of Massachusetts than the assertions of the people whom Butler has brought forward to testify. No one believes Tewksbury to be perfect; doubtless many things can be improved; it is probably wisdom to remove Marsh and Doctor Lathrop; but the noise and disturbance created by Gen. Butler is that of an agitator, rather than that of a reformer.

In the investigation Gen. Butler has shown that it is not reform in the State Institution that he is after. The Cambridge Press truly says, that if Gen. Butler had the power quietly and without commotion to produce the instantaneous conversion to the gospel of Christ of thousands—he would hesitate, provided the opposite course was open to him—of making a disturbance and loud noise. In this case he could have suggested to the Board of Lunacy and Charity his suspicions of abuses there, and they could have been quietly investigated and reformed, if found needed. This would have been his course, if reform had been his object. Plainly it is not that. It is disturbance he wants.— And after he has suggested Frank Sanborn as "the only proper officer to whom can be delegated the charge of the alms house," he now declares that he has never recognized him as an officer of the board.

No one should object to a thorough investigation of this or any other public institution. Neither should politics enter into or control our opinions regarding any abuses, if found. But it should be shown that such things occur now—not ten or twenty years ago. Butler has presented one side of the case. Let us hear both sides before we judge.

Letter from Andover.

ANDOVER, MASS., April 27, '83.

DEAR PRESS.—A few days of rest and relaxation in this fine old town, is a luxury which any one might covet. Naturally, old associations and tender memories, make him who has been a student here, loyal to his school-day convictions as to the superior worth and advantages of this place; but there is that in the outward aspect of the town, the character of its institutions, the quiet culture and generous hospitality of its inhabitants, and the recollection of the great and good who have here lived and labored, which appeals to any stranger visitor possessing any responsiveness in his nature.

Andover is a place of "magnificent distances." Her few thousand inhabitants are not huddled together in city fashion. Broad streets stretch away through village and country, along which substantial and comfortable and, in some instances, elegant residences, are located. The natural charms and attractive features of the town are known to every student, who helps fill up the hours of recreation by many a stroll to distant hill, through shady groves, along quiet river and by mimic lakes. What far reaching views are obtained from this sacred hill! Seen in the summer time, when thickly wooded heights and smiling valleys wear the mantle of green, their loveliness and grandeur are indescribable. Dark lines of evergreen make pleasing contrast with the lighter foliage. In the distance, church spires, rising above the tree tops, mark the site of villages. Four miles to the north, the great mills of Lawrence lift their massive walls. The view of this city should be had from the walk under the "Elm Arch" on the Seminary campus. A tree standing at the centre of the farther end of the walk forms a double gothic arch, and we look out of this great Cathedral casement, as it were, upon a beautiful landscape, in the background of which the spires and chimneys, houses and manufactories are outlined against the blue sky. Tewksbury's now famous Almshouse is seen in the distant west, reminding us of the fact that to the venerable Prof. Park belongs the honor of fixing distinction upon the unassuming town, rather than to our irrepressible "Governor B." While traveling abroad, the Professor, on being asked where Andover was, quietly replied, that it was "close to Tewksbury." From this distance, at least, we can discover nothing unpleasant about the State institution.

On a clear day the horizon, to the west and north, is broken by the dark blue outlines of mountains—Wachusett, Peterborough mountains, Monadnock, the Uncanoonucs, Kearsarge, Agamenticus and others. We remember with what a thrill of pleasure we witnessed the sinking of the sun behind Wachusett, on the evening of our first day in this town, a number of years ago. Andover has never seemed common place since that experience.

Speaking of sunsets, where, in this clime at least, are they more glorious than here? Go up on Prospect Hill some summer morning and see the sun come up out of the Atlantic, and watch the dark shadows creeping silently to the west. In the evening, take your station on Sunset Rock and see the sun go down in splendor, the warm colors lighting up the hill-tops and painting the heavens with gold, and purple, and crimson, and amber, while the long shadows creep stealthily once more over the face of the earth. Surely you will then be ready, not simply to admit, but to earnestly contend that the day breaks and closes over few places so gloriously as over this favored town.

I have not time to speak of the many pleasant walks and drives which this place affords; nor to mention the many quiet nooks and lovely retreats abounding. I can only give your readers this bird's eye view from the hill top, letting the fancy—as flitting as these cloud-shadows which chase each other over the sunlit landscape—supply the rest.

Crowning the Hill are the fine buildings of the Theological Seminary and Phillips Academy, about which are clustered the homes of the Professors and Teachers. The two new houses of Profs. Tucker and Churchill are fine specimens of the Queen Anne Architecture. Seen across the green campus and against the blue sky, these gems of the builders' art in their pleasing outlines and harmonious colors, form a mosaic of rare beauty. The new Seminary chapel is a gothic structure of rough stone trimmed with brown-stone. It is substantial and ornate, and its interior furnishings and decorations are rich and tasteful. Brechin Hall, which contains the Seminary Library, is a fine edifice, the gift of John and Peter Smith and John Dove. Like the chapel it is gothic, and is built of rough stone trimmed with cut stone and brick. From its tower a charming view is obtained of the surrounding country. Within, more than forty thousand volumes may be found on its shelves. We commend this fact to papers of the Boston Herald type, which are accustomed to serve up great theological themes in five minute articles. In the lower story of Brechin Hall may be found the museum comprising, beside many other choice things, the large and fine collection of Palestinian flowers, birds, animals, inscriptions, coins and photographs gathered by Dr. Selah Merrill, the archæologists of the American Palestine Exploration Society. Bartlet Chapel, which formerly included within its walls, Chapel, Library and Lecture Rooms, has been thoroughly reconstructed, thanks to the generosity of Mr. Winkley, of Philadelphia, and the Alumni. A "Theologue" of former days would hardly recognize the building with its fine clock and bell tower. Within are large pleasant rooms, fitted up with every necessary convenience for class lectures, society meetings, and devotional services. How different these light, cheerful rooms from those which once occupied the north portion of this building with their inclined floors and narrow high-backed seats, stiffer than all the old-school-theology that was here battled against; but there are men in every part of the globe, whose thoughts will revert to those former dingy rooms with tenderness and enthusiasm, for in them a Park and a Phelps gave those lectures, into the preparation of which went commanding genius, broad and deep scholarship, vast attainments, logical acumen, and indefatigable labor born of loyal consecration to a high and holy calling. Across the street opposite the new chapel stands the old stone gambrel roof house popularly known as "Uncle Tom's Cabin," in which "Uncle Tom" was not written. The authoress of that celebrated work lived in this house when her husband, Prof. Stowe, taught New TestamentGreek here in the Seminary. I have been told that the proof sheets of "Uncle Tom" were corrected here, and that here also "Dread" was written. I cannot vouch for the truth of this, however. Mr. Chadwick's Insurance Calendar of last year present a correct likeness of the building. Phillips and Bartlet Halls contain the rooms of the students, which are kept in thorough repair, and are neatly furnished. In Bartlet Hall, a spacious reading room may be found, generously supplied with the leading papers and periodicals. The new building in the rear campus which contains the laundry, bath rooms, closets and lavatories, supplies a long felt need, and would seem to complete every necessary arrangement for the use and convenience of the students, an object never lost sight of by Trustees and Faculty.

Those who think that this "School of the Prophets" has been "done to death" by the late controversy over the so-called "new departure" had better come up and view the remains. Certainly they would find a very lively corpse. Let one but glance over the new catalogue and see preparations that have been made for future classes; the tempting bill of fare, in the course of instruction presented; the list of Professors, now made complete, together with the lectures to the Advanced Class, and the undergraduates, and he will respect, at least, the present intentions of the institution, even if he forgets its noble work in the years that are gone. Andover Seminary has not yet completed its mission. It will live on, inspired by the holy ambition to fit consecrated young men to go forth into the great wide world as helpers of mankind in all that is noble and good and true. The past at least is secure, and this hallowed record which bears the names of Mills, and Judson, and Newell, and Nott, and Rice, and a host of other worthies coming after them, is but the earnest of what shall yet be. An institution which has had such an influence in propagating the Gospel at home and abroad; which has sustained such vital relations to schools, and colleges, and seminaries, and churches, here in our East and West and South, as well as in the Turkish Empire, in India, and China and Japan, and Africa, and the isles of the sea, such an institution belongs to the world. Hostile criticism may dash its angry waves against this revered school and set at naught its sacred teachings and hallowed traditions; but the old ship will sail on. A divine hand, we believe, at the helm, will guide it safely through temptestuous seas, and keep it off the sunken rocks and dangerous shoals.

A few rods in the rear of the Seminary buildings is the burial ground which looks off peacefully upon the beautiful valley to the north. A glance at the names which are chiseled on these memorial stones confirms the assertion that Andover Seminary belongs to the world. Here we find the names of scholars and teachers that are familiar in every quarter of the globe. Ebenezer Porter; Leonard Woods, Abbot Professor of Christian Theology and President of the Faculty; Moses Stuart the profound student and skilled interpreter of the Sacred Word; Justin Edwards, Bela Bates Edwards and others. Here also rest the remains of Leonard Woods, President of Bowdoin, his grave marked by a graceful gothic monument. Half way down the walk on the left we come upon a substantial granite tablet, the shrine of hundreds of busy men who once sat as disciples at the feet of him who sleeps beneath. Here lies all that is mortal of Samuel Harvey Taylor, famous as a classical teacher, and as the Principal of Phillips Academy for over thirty years. As we have so many quaint epitaphs brought to our attention, let us pause and read the inscription upon this stone, so simple, so comprehensive, so full of pathos and tender reverence. It is from the pen of Prof. Park, as great a Rhetorician as Theologian, and is justly admired for its beauty.—

SAMUEL HARVEY TAYLOR
Born Oct. 3, 1807.
Principal of Phillips Academy '37—'71.
Six thousand Pupils were under his care from 1829 to 1871.
Surrounded by his Bible Class on Sabbath morning Jan. 27, 1871, he fell and died in the Vestibule of Phillips Academy.
Bold, resolute, firm, stong in body and mind, he spoke with authority.
His skill in letters; his love for the wisdom of the Ancients; his veneration for law order duty; his enterprising, vigilant and faithful life made him a man of mark.
As an editor, an author, versed in affairs not less than in various learning, he won laurels which he laid at the feet of his Lord.
Hundreds of his pupils paid him their tribute of gratitude while he lived, and made great lamentation over him when he died.

The Academy keeps on in the even tenor of its way. A new Labratory is going up which will be fitted out with the necessary apparatus. Would that some philanthropic person of means might provide for substantial and ornate dormitories, so that the present unsightly "Latin" and "English Commons" might be retired. Messrs. Frank Proctor and Arthur Goodrich, of Peabody, who are students here, are reflecting credit upon their town. The former who graduates this year will take high rank in his class and will enter one of the advanced classes of Harvard next fall. The latter has been chosen as one of ten to compete for the "Means' Prizes." The opportunity is open to the whole school, the ten best orations being selected by the faculty out of those that are presented. Mr. Goodrich has just been chosen as one of the editors of "The Phillipian." The "Rugby" game of "Hare and Hounds" has been introduced by the "Cads." On a recent "run" the Hares "doubled" on the Hounds and then boarded a Lawrence train distributing the "scent" from the car platform. One of our Peabody boys who happened to be among the Hounds was thus led on a wild chase through Lawrence and North Andover. The Hounds did well, however, coming in behind the hares in a few minutes.

A few rods to the north of Phillips, on School St., Abbot Academy is situated, an institution for the higher education of women, and one of the best of its kind. It has fine spacious grounds, but has nothing to boast of in the way of Architecture. Its dormitories, however, wear a quiet, home-like air, giving one the right impression of what the institution is—a home-school.

The Punchard Free School, a substantial brick edifice, is located a short distance off of Main street to the left, half way up to the Seminary. As the Public High School, it is doing a noble work for the sons and daughters of the town. For years it has been under the care of the present Principal, Mr. Wm. G. Goldsmith, a man of unassuming manners, but of sterling worth.

Mention should be made of Memorial Hall, a fine brick edifice with granite trimmings, erected to the memory of those fellow townsmen who died in the war for the Union. The building stands at the foot of Main street. Within is a large marble tablet bearing the names of the dead. Here also is the Town Library of several thousand volumes, and a fine reading room.

Of churches there are in the village six; three Congregational, one Baptist, one Episcopalian and one Catholic. The latter church is completing a new edifice. The South Congregational Church has the prestige of an old parish church. Its house of worship is a fine large structure of the Romanesque style. It has lately been decorated within, in beautiful designs and tints. The itinerating tendency of modern Congregationalism is exemplified by this old church even, whose pastor for the six years past retires, to give place to—somebody. Why this state of things? Is it due to the over exactions of our churches, the Popery of the brethren, or the general unfaithfulness of pastors? Certainly, not to the latter, if they conscientiously strive to be what the sacred school on the hill-top teaches they should be—ministers.

But already my letter has been drawn out at too great a length, and I must close. Very truly yours,

JOHN W. COLWELL.

The annual meeting of the Ladies' Benevolent Society was held at the residence of Mrs. L. W. Thacher, Wednesday afternoon, May 2d. The retail business in Salem seems to be unusually good this spring. In an interview with Mr. Boynton, manager of Wilmot's Clothing House, he says that trade never was so good as it is now and has been for the last month. Last Saturday although he had a number of extra salesmen from Boston, hundreds of customers were turned away, it being impossible to wait on them all so great was the rush. This speaks well for the trade but we will venture to say that the special bargains and large stock he shows the public, as well as the Watches, Clocks, etc., he gives to his customers, has a great deal to do with this great rush of business. Such a clothing house as "Wilmot's" should be patronized all that it is possible, by the citizens of Salem and its vicinity, as by having such a house it makes the prices so low, that all can buy and also help the general trade.—Salem Observer.

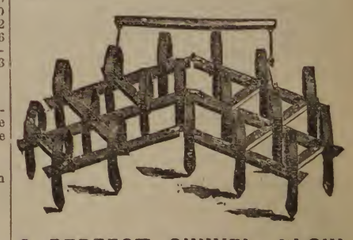
VALUABLE REAL ESTATE ON LOWELL STREET AT AUCTION.



WILL be sold at Public Auction, THURSDAY, MAY 17th, 1883, at 4 o'clock in the Afternoon, on the Premises.

The valuable Real Estate of the late JOSEPH S. NICHOLS, on Lowell street, Peabody, consisting of a two and one-half story Dwelling House and Stable, with the land under and adjoining. The house is modern built and has on the first floor a Parlor, Sitting-room, Dining-room, Kitchen and Washroom. On the second floor are four large sleeping chambers and bath room. The attic has one finished chamber, the whole supplied with elegant china and press closets, marble mantles open grates, set bowls and wash tubs, bath room, hot and cold water, furnace, etc. House piped for gas.

The Land contains about three acres and is well supplied with choice fruit trees.

The location of this estate is very desirable being within a few minutes ride of the town and yet far enough away to have the benefit of the Country.

WHITCOMB & CARTER.

A PERFECT SWIVEL PLOW.

These few words will interest the farmers very much, as they have always looked with disgust upon the dead furrows left with the old landside plow, being unable to get a good Swivel Plow that would do good work and hold easily. The NEW NORTH AMERICAN SWIVEL PLOW will do it as it has won a record never before obtained by any other. It has been in use but a short time, this being its first season in Boston. C. H. Thompson & Co., 71 Clinton street, took the agency for New England and have sold up to the present time, about five hundred Plows and not one has been returned. Mr. Earl, of Worcester, has sold over one hundred and has had only one returned. These are facts worth knowing. Whitcomb & Carter, of Beverly, are the agents for this section, and their sales have surpassed their expectations. The manufacturers have sold every plow they have got or will have this season and are receiving orders daily which they cannot fill. These statements may look to some like blowing an advertising horn very loud, but such is not the case, as these are statements that come from honest, reliable men and they only ask of you as a further proof of these statements to take one of these plows on trial. We are informed that there are several in use in this section and if so, we hope they will come to the front and speak of their merits or demerits for the benefit of their neighbors.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The Lawrence American has the following complimentary allusion to the entertainment, given Monday evening, April 30th, at North Andover, to the employes of the mills there, by John H. Sutton, commemorative of his marriage: It was a most happy thought which summoned into existence the complimentary concert, supper and ball, tendered by Mr. John H. Sutton, to the employes of Suttons and the North Andover Mills, the Eben Sutton Company, and invited guests, at Merrimac Hall, Monday evening last. To the 350 persons who attended, the recollections of the event will be those of pure pleasure, when Memory's curtains are drawn aside for a peep at the past. The motive which prompted such action on the part of the newly married superintendent voices itself, and attests the kindly feeling entertained by that gentleman towards those with whom he comes in contact. While the occasion was of a purely informal character, it was notable for its freedom from objectionable features, and an uninterrupted flow of enjoyment. Among those present were Gen. Eben Sutton, John Elliot, Esq., and Selectman Dale. The concert, which was under the supervision of Mr. Robert Elliot, was received with marked manifestations of approval, and was an acceptable portion of the evening's entertainment. The concert was followed by dancing, Mr. Robert Elliot officiating as floor director, with the following aids: Messrs. James Woodhouse, D. W. Sutcliffe, E. S. Robinson, James Howarth, Wm. Mackie. The tables in the Odd Fellows' banquet hall, where supper was spread, presented a handsome sight, with their load of choice edibles, and the bill of fare was creditable to the gentlemen in charge of the same. The festivities were continued into the wee sma' hours.

A correspondent of the Newton Transcript writes the following in reference to the crowded condition of the primary schools, which, it would seem, prevails there as well as in this town:—"In view of the crowded condition of our schools, especially the primary department, the idea—not new—has suggested itself to me for half-day schools, in the two lower classes at least; one half attending in the forenoon, and one half in the afternoon. In this way, the same teacher is able, with the same ease, to teach twice the number, and I venture the assertion, that the pupils would be as far advanced at the age of ten years, as though they had been constant attendants morning and afternoon. The only objection that may arise is, that parents desire their children taken care of for a longer time—a questionable motive for an objection, as our schools are not primarily established as nurseries or a place for cast off children. It seems to me, in view of the large expense, unavoidable and necessary, that this thought is worthy of consideration by the school committee. In its favor are equal advancements in study, improved health and more education of the various powers of observation."

A telegram has been received by N. H. Poor, our town clerk, claiming to come from the missing son of the late Daniel C. Goodwin, who died some months since in this town, and who, it will be remembered, left considerable property. It was known that he had one son—but his whereabouts were unknown. He left home and lived for some time with Chas. Benjamin, in town, afterwards he went, it was supposed, to California. At first communication was had with him, but of late years we learn this had entirely ceased. The telegram read thus:

TABLE ROCK, CALIFORNIA.
To the Town Clerk of Peabody:—Wire name of person in charge of Daniel C. Goodwin's estate. (Signed)
DANIEL GOODWIN.

The dispatch was answered by Mr. Poor, and a copy of it transmitted to Levi Spaulding, the administrator of the estate. As there was no will, if the person sending the dispatch is the son of Mr. Goodwin, he will come into possession of the property, which represents some $25,000. It will be necessary for him to establish his identity, and it is probable that Mr. Spaulding will hear directly from him within a short time.

The exhibition of the Salem Art Club which is now in progress at the store of J. G. Lowery, in Salem, is worthy of a visit by all our readers who are at all susceptible to the display of the beautiful. Our own town is represented there, by a very handsome flower panel and pansies in oil, the work of Mrs. Theodore M. Osborne, and Miss H. F. Osborne contributes an exceedingly natural view, apparently at the door of a wayside inn, and admirably painted. The collection embraces every department of art from charcoal sketches to oils. There are two excellent views of the old Endicott house. Taken as a whole the exhibition surpasses in artistic merit, any of its predecessors.

The afternoon dancing school, which has been under the charge of Mr. H.O. Upton, concluded with a ball in Upton's Hall, last Wednesday evening, which was a very pretty and successful affair. It opened at eight o'clock with the Grand March, led by Master Frank Arnold and Miss Bessie Randall. The various square and round dances were executed in a manner creditable alike to pupils and teacher. The smiling faces and tasteful apparel of the children as they glided through the different changes formed a very attractive series of pictures. At ten o'clock there was an intermission for cake, cream and coffee, after which some of the older people joined in the festivities. We should be inclined to call this the best school Mr. Upton has had, if he did not have the faculty of making each school such. The music was excellent, introducing liberal selections from Iolanthe. The party broke up at midnight, the elders pleased with the children's appearance and the younger people to dream of Mr. Upton's school next year.

Mr. O'Connell, who was brought before Justice Merrill last week for disturbing the school of Miss Batchelder, will probably pay his fine. The case against him was a clear one, and he with many others was very likely ignorant of the law in this respect. When a scholar is sent to our public schools, the teacher takes the place of the parent during the session, and the scholar is entirely under the teacher's control. Mr. O'Connell had no more right to order his own child from school against the wishes of the teacher in charge, than the child of John Smith. It will be a lesson to him—as well as others, which is all the School Committee desire. The justice could have imposed a fine of fifty dollars and costs within the limitation of the statutes.

A lively runaway occurred on last Thursday afternoon. A horse belonging to P. D. Perkins was standing in the rear of their store, when from some cause he became frightened, and started to run up Central street. He turned up Railroad Avenue, leaving about three barrels of flour, some eggs and potatoes along the road. He struck the carpenter shop of Benj. Beckett, nearly striking a workman who was standing on the platform, and continuing on passed between a post and C. H. Tigh's shop, where he left the wreck of the wagon. He passed through Sawyer street to Lowell, and on to Chestnut street, where he was captured by Mr. H. A. Wilson, and returned to his owner.

A number of our Grand Army boys visited Boston last Thursday evening, to hear the concert of Army Songs, in the Fair building. They speak very enthusiastically of the performance, especially the rendering of the "Star Spangled Banner," by Mrs. H. F. Knowles, and of the Drum Corps of Philadelphia, which was far ahead of anything ever heard in this vicinity. It shows that the love for these grand old patriotic songs has not died out, and when delegations of the boys from all parts of the state come to such a performance, it is a reminder to our musicians of the kind of music that can best stir the heart of the populace.

Don't forget that the patronage of home traders means the continued success and prosperity of the town or city where you dwell. It means the fostering of that spirit of enterprise which should characterize any place. The flaming advertisements of Boston dealers for the past few weeks lure the people to bargains which are too often only on paper, and there is not half the satisfaction derived from their patronage, to the purchase of the reliable goods kept by traders at home, who you know will not deceive you.

The sociable at the Methodist church last Thursday, was improved by the members of the church and congregation to become acquainted with their new pastor, Rev. Mr. Smith. Music and readings were indulged in by the young people, and an enjoyable time was had. It is understood that the new pastor is in favor of the renewal of these social occasions as often as once a month, believing in their value, as well as the religious services, towards the upbuilding and strengthening of the church.

The Danvers Mirror has the following. Our friend O. B. Chadwick of Peabody can insure against fire, in a large number of thoroughly responsible companies, but he can't insure against boils. After several weeks' enforced absence from business quarters by a numerous series of those pests, it is a pleasure to see him about again, looking as good as new—and that is as well as any man need to look.

HERE AT LAST.

After Long and Weary Waiting Relief is Brought to those who Need it.

"Well, Pat," said an Orange county Physician to a complaining Irish patient some years ago, "for that pain in your chest you had better go home and put on a mustard plaster. I can't think this minute of anything better. And by the way," added the doctor turning to a friend, "I wish somebody would invent a real good plaster—something actually helpful for such cases as Pat's Maybe they will sometime, when its too late for me to use it."

When BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER was placed on the market about ten years ago the doctor's hope became a fact. Because of the rare medicinal virtues inherent in it, its rapid action and sure results, the Capcine is fast displacing the slow-acting plasters of former days, for all affections to which a plaster is ever applicable. Price 25 cents. In the middle of the genuine is cut the word CAPCINE.

Book Notices.

The Musical Herald for May is on our table, and is fully equal to its predecessors. The subscription list of this journal is rapidly increasing, and well it may, for it is the best musical journal in existence. The music of the number is the "Agnus Dei" and "Dona Nobis Pacem," from Weber's Mass in G., The Asra, by Rubenstein, and a Valse, by Chopin. There are also notes, correspondence and musical criticism. The price is $1.50 per year, single copies 15 cts. Musical Herald Co., Boston.

The May number of Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly is filled with matter of the most interesting and attractive character; the illustrations are profuse, and the colored frontispiece, "The Little Mischief Makers," from Blume's painting, is really worth more than the price of the magazine. Among the profusely illustrated articles are "The Shadows which Threaten France," by Richard B. Kimball; "Fools and Jesters," and "The British Museum," by N. Robinson, etc. The thrilling romance, "The Beautiful Countess of Clairville," is continued, and there are short stories, sketches, etc. There is an abundance of brief articles, paragraphs, etc., entertaining and replete with information. A single copy is only 25 cents, or $3 a year postpaid. Address, Mrs. Frank Leslie, Publisher, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.

The May Wide Awake presents a charming collections of things wise, amusing and delightful, both in text and illustration, calculated to interest and instruct both boys and girls, and their elders as well; to give an abundance of strong pictures, and an ample variety of delightful reading, fiction, description, fun and sober counsel, is a high ideal, and the Wide Awake lives up to this standard.

The May Manhattan contains a study of Hamlet, with illustration of the Play Scene from Maclise's painting and other engravings; stories by Julian Hawthorne, Edna Dean Proctor and Mrs. Harriet Prescott Spofford; poems by Geo. P. Lathrop, Edith M. Thomas, R. H. Stoddard, Edgar Fawcett and A. P. Williams; illustrated paper on Carhaix and The Descendants of Louis Phillippe; and other timely topics.

The Biographer is a promising venture n monthly periodical literature. It gives a large number of concise, but by no means dry, biographical sketches of men and women eminent in all departments of activity. Subjects are chosen with the view to gratify the public curiosity for particulars of the life and career of people whose names are appearing in the public prihts. In a word, their selection is timely. The sketches are ably written, and their interest is heightened by accompanying faithful and well-executed portraits. In quality of paper and printing and tastefulness of appearance, The Biographer is among the best periodicals we have seen. We anticipate that its enterprising publisher will be rewarded with a large sale of his unique magazine, which supplies a need hitherto felt. The Biographer is sent to any address at 25 cents a copy, or $2.50 a year; and to foreign addresses for $3 a year. New York: 23 Park Row.

In the pages of Brown & Holland's Shorthand News will be found much that is of interest to shorthand writers all over the country. It is bright, lively, and a credit to the profession. 20 cents a single number, $2 a year. 50 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill.

Chicken down—the color of the newly hatched—is the latest shade of yellow.

An insurance agent named Pyle,
In running fell over the style,
St. Jacobs Oil gave relief
And the pain was so brief,
He got up and said, "I should smile."

A lame old lady at Keyser,
Had no one to advise her,
'Till Dr. John Boyle,
Tried St. Jacobs Oil,
Its action did simply surprise her.

Crepe lisse in a variety of shades, blue, yellow, pink, crushed strawberry, gold and crimson, is used quite extensively in trimming some of the finer hats. One bonnet, composed entirely of delicate pink crepe lisse, with no trimming, save a wreath of rich red tulips around the brim, is exceedingly pretty.

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN BOSS.

How to Promote Personal Power—A New Radical Reformer.

"There is no provision in the Divine economy for political bosses!"

With a bang of his fist, and in the voice of a man who had made up his mind on the subject, Rev. James Chambers, of Calvary Presbyterian Church, Harlem, recently opened his sermon with this announcement. He was right. The only boss authorized by the Book is mentioned in these words: "He who ruleth his own spirit is greater than he who taketh a city."

Commonly, the better side of men is subject to the despotism of the worse side. Bad passions, bad humors, mean jealousies and base revenges are all bosses. One of the worst of bosses is bile. What is most depressing in philosophical or theological thought is due to it. Old General Debility is another tyrannical boss. He lashes men who are naturally bad or miserably weak.

Concerning his deliverance from this bondage, Rev. S. P. Lewis, pastor of the Eighth Street Baptist Church, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "I was suffering from exhaustion and general debility. As an invigorant I used PARKER'S GINGER TONIC. I never met with anything so effective. It is an elegant family medicine. I take a bottle in my valise when I go on my annual vacations."

PARKER'S GINGER TONIC neither intoxicates nor promotes a desire for strong drinks. The most pronounced temperance people use and praise it for this reason alone. It cures Malarial Fevers, Consumption, Rheumatism, and all diseases of the Blood. Also weaknesses peculiar to women. Its action is prompt and pervasive. Test it once, and you will adopt it as a home remedy. Prices, 50 cents and $1 a bottle. Hiscox & Co., Chemists, New York.

KEEP YOUR SCALP CLEAN.

The best thing out for removing Dandruff is

HEYLINGBERG'S

EUREKA DANDRUFF REMOVER.

It has been thoroughly tested by hundreds of gentlemen, Ladies, and Children, and we have plenty of testimonials of its good results. It is cooling, removes Dandruff, invigorates the roots of the hair, and will quickly produce a strong and beautiful growth in all cases where the roots of the hair are not fully dead, and will stop this unpleasant itching; in fact it is the best hair dressing in use. It is not greasy or sticky, and is warranted free of all oils, and poisins, and will prove the cleanest, safest and most economical Hair Dressing to be found.

Peabody, Mass., Nov. 18, 1881.

Mr. J. J. Heylingberg Dear Sir:—Both myself and wife have used your Eureka Dandruff Remover for some time, with the most satisfactory results, and recommend it as being indispensable for the toilet. Yours truly,

FRANK A. BRAGDON.

A GOOD, ODD FELLOW.

Mr. Cutler, of 21 Lyons St., New Haven, Conn.—How He takes Life Easy now and how He Obtained the Means to Regain his Health.

Mr. Cutler, of 21 Lyons St., is a faithful Odd Fellow, and for forty years a member of Quinipiac Lodge No. 1 (the oldest organization of its kind in the State of Conn.) He is a man much respected in New Haven. Your reporter found him at his pleasant home on Lyons street one afternoon, taking life easy. "You see," he says, "I'm trying to make myself feel a little indisposed I presume its the lingering results of a Lodge dinner which I attended a while ago down at the beach. I have been, as many of my friends in New Haven know, a sufferer for years from indigestion and biliousness. When I have indulged in too hearty food I've had to suffer at times extremely. As a result I've had to place myself under my physician's care often, and I have taken a great many remedies, but I find after a thorough trial that Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is the most excellent medicine I have ever had knowledge of for any of the disorders above mentioned. It leaves no exhaustive effects, but rather strengthens and regulates the digestive organs in a charming manner. We keep it as a household medicine, and I have recommended it to my friends, for it is an excellent preparation."

Mr. Cutler is a man whose word can be depended upon. His testimony is but a re-echo of the words of thousands in New England who have received relief from the sole use of Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY.

PROBATE NOTICE.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Essex ss. Probate Court.

To all Persons interested in the Estate of GEORGE UPTON, late of Peabody, in said county, glue manufacturer, deceased, GREETING:

Whereas, King Upton, of Salem, in said county, named as an executor in the last will and testament of said deceased, heretofore proved, has presented to said Court his petition praying that letters testamentary may be issued to him jointly with Marian C. Upton, and Henry Wardwell, the other executors therein named, and that he may be exempt from giving a surety or sureties on his bond, for the reasons alleged in said petition.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Salem, in said county of Essex, on the first Monday of May, next, at nine o'clock, before noon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.

And said King Upton is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper, called the Peabody Press, printed at Peabody, the last publication to be two days at least before said Court.

Witness, George F. Choate, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this sixteenth day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three. J. T. Mahoney, Register.

ADMINISTRATOR'S NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given, that the subscriber has been duly appointed administrator of the estate of DANIEL C. GOODWIN, late of Peabody in the county of Essex, currier, deceased, and has taken upon himself that trust, by giving bonds, as the law directs. All persons having demands upon the estate of said deceased are required to exhibit the same; and all persons indebted to said estate are called upon to make payment to

Miscellaneous.

CAT GUT.

Violin, guitar, and banjo strings, and in fact all sorts that come under the general head of "gut," are made from the entrails of lambs and cattle, from the delicate threads used for sewing racket ball covers up to the half-inch thick round belts. After a lamb is seven months old its entrails are no longer fit for making strings for violins; consequently this branch of the manufacture can only be carried on a few months in each year.

"Few people," said Mr. Turner, a manufacturer here, "have any idea of the many uses to which gut strings are now put. They are used to hold up clock weights, for belting, for the lacing on lawn tennis and racket bats, for lacrosse scoops, for weaving fine whip covers, for sewing covers on balls, for jewellers' drills, and for a thousand things, I suppose, that even I do not know of. One down-town manufacturer uses from $7,000 to $8,000 per annum just for making lawn tennis, racket, and battledore bats. 'Anglers' leaders, or snells?' No, not at all, although most people have an idea that those are made of gut. That material would never do for such a purpose. It would get soft in the water in a few minutes and the fish would eat it off. In fact I don't know but what it would be good bait, Most so-called 'gut' leaders are made form silk and the best from a marine plant.

"All the work of making gut strings is about the same, but greater care has to be exercised in preparing those intended for musical instruments than others. The process of manufacturing those is comparatively simple, but far from easy. When the entrails, for which a good price has to be paid, are thoroughly cleaned, they are split with a razor. Only one half is fit for use in violin strings. This is the upper or smoth half. The lower half is fatty, rough, and of unequal thickness. The strips are put through rollers turned by hand for eight or nine days, to take all the stretch out of them. Then they are spun, or twisted. Five or six strands go to make an E string, eight or nine an A string, and twenty are put into a D string. Then they go through a bleaching bath of sulphur fumes. After that they are twisted again. Then they are softened in pearlash water, again subjected to the action of the sulphur fumes, twisted again, dried, and finally rubbed down smoth with pumice stone. Altogether it takes ten or eleven days to make a string. When done they are each 72 inches long—four lengths for a violin—and thirty of them coiled separately and tied together make up the 'bundle' of the trade. We can make just as good violin strings here as the best that come from Saxony or any other part of Germany, and very much better than any that are made in France, but we cannot compete with the best Italian string in point of quality. The Italian makers have one great advantage—that the raw material is thin, fine, free from fat, and evenly smooth all around, so that they can use the whole, instead of having to split, as we must. That gives to their completed strings a durability and evenness that we cannnot attain. No gut harp strings are made in this country.

"A good many E strings now used on violins in this country are made of steel wire. This is the finest string and most liable to break. The wire is, of course, the most durable by far, but it lacks the tone of a gut string. Perhaps the strongest recommendation in favor of wire strings is that they can be furnished for about fifteen cents a dozen.—N. Y. Sun.

NOT SO SMART, AFTER ALL.

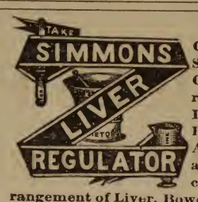
A woman dropped into a commission house on Woodbridge street to purchase a barrel of apples for family use, but she did not mean to be bitten in the purchase.

"Are all the best ones on top?" she cautiously asked.

"Oh, no; the contents are alike all the way through."

"Will you knock the head out of the other end?"

"Certainly, madam," and and in two minutes the feat was accomplished and she saw the same grade of choice apples. This satisfied her that there was no deception, and she paid over her money. It was not until she related the circumstance at the dinner table that anything happened to raise a doubt in her mind. Then her husband said:



"My dear, I used to buy and pack and ship apples. The rule is a peck of nice ones at either end of the barrel and a bushel and a half of worm-holes in the middle. Pass the butter.—Detroit Free Press.

A TEA DRUNKARD.

The term "tea drunkard" is known throughout Russia, and implies, not the abuse of robus or any spirit distilled from the herb, but that the cup which cheers intoxicates also, if zealously adhered to. Strong tea is well-known to be a powerful though fleeting, excitant of the nervous system; and if the reader likes to make the experiment, let him drink a dozen or fifteen cups of tea in the Russian style—that is, without cream or sugar, but flavored with a drop of lemon-juice—in the space of a couple of hours, and he may arrive at the conclusion that there is something rational about such an epithet as tea drunkard after all.—Chambers's Journal.

The wonderful sack of flour which was sold so often during war times, netting two hundred thousand dollars for the sanitary fund, is to be placed on exhibition in a California town. Probably after it has been on exhibition a few years, some boarding house keeper will buy it to work up into indestructible biscuits.—Pecks Sun.

For Dyspepsia, Costiveness, Sick Headache, Chronic Diarrhœa, Jaundice, Impurity of the Blood, Fever and Ague, Malaria, and all Diseases caused by Derangement of Liver, Bowels and Kidneys.

SYMPTOMS OF A DISEASED LIVER.

Bad Breath; Pain in the Side, sometimes the pain is felt under the Shoulder-blade, mistaken for Rheumatism; general loss of appetite; Bowels generally costive, sometimes alternating with lax; the head is troubled with pain, is dull and heavy, with considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of leaving undone something which ought to have been done; a slight, dry cough and flushed face is sometimes an attendant, often mistaken for consumption; the patient complains of weariness and debility; nervous, easily startled; feet cold or burning, sometimes a prickly sensation of the skin exists; spirits are low and despondent, and, although satisfied that exercise would be beneficial, yet one can hardly summon up fortitude to try it—in fact, distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred when but few of them existed, yet examination after death has shown the Liver to have been extensively deranged.

It should be used by all persons, old and young, whenever any of the above symptoms appear.

Persons Traveling or Living in Unhealthy Localities, by taking a dose occasionally to keep the Liver in healthy action, will avoid all Malaria, Bilious attacks, Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Depression of Spirits, etc. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage.

If You have eaten anything hard of digestion, or feel heavy after meals, or sleepless at night, take a dose and you will be relieved.

Time and Doctors' Bills will be saved by always keeping the Regulator in the House!

For, whatever the ailment may be, a thoroughly safe purgative, alterative and tonic can never be out of place. The remedy is harmless and does not interfere with business or pleasure.

IT IS PURELY VEGETABLE,

And has all the power and efficacy of Calomel or Quinine, without any of the injurious after effects.

A Governor's Testimony.

Simmons Liver Regulator has been in use in my family for some time, and I am satisfied it is a valuable addition to the medical science.

J. Gill Shorter, Governor of Ala.

Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, of Ga., says: Have derived some benefit from the use of Simmons Liver Regulator, and wish to give it a further trial.

"The only Thing that never fails to Relieve."—I have used many remedies for Dyspepsia, Liver Affection and Debility, but never have found anything to benefit me to the extent Simmons Liver Regulator has. I sent from Minnesota to Georgia for it, and would send further for such a medicine, and would advise all who are similarly affected to give it a trial as it seems the only thing that never fails to relieve.

P. M. Janney, Minneapolis, Minn.

Dr. T. W. Mason says: From actual experience in the use of Simmons Liver Regulator in my practice I have been and am satisfied to use and prescribe it as a purgative medicine.

A GOOD, ODD FELLOW.

Mr. Cutler, of 21 Lyons St., New Haven, Conn.—How He takes Life Easy now and how He Obtained the Means to Regain his Health.

Mr. Cutler, of 21 Lyons St., is a faithful Odd Fellow, and for forty years a member of Quinipiac Lodge No. 1 (the oldest organization of its kind in the State of Conn.) He is a man much respected in New Haven. Your reporter found him at his pleasant home on Lyons street one afternoon, taking life easy. "You see," he says, "I'm trying to make myself feel a little indisposed. I presume its the lingering results of a Lodge dinner which I attended a while ago down at the beach. I have been, as many of my friends in New Haven know, a sufferer for years from indigestion and biliousness. When I have indulged in too hearty food I've had to suffer at times extremely. As a result I've had to place myself under my physician's care often, and I have taken a great many remedies, but I find after a thorough trial that Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is the most excellent medicine I have ever had knowledge of for any of the disorders above mentioned. It leaves no exhaustive effects, but rather strengthens and regulates the digestive organs in a charming manner. We keep it as a household medicine, and I have recommended it to my friends, for it is an excellent preparation."

Mr. Cutler is a man whose word can be depended upon. His testimony is but a re-echo of the words of thousands in New England who have received relief from the sole use of Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY.

PROBATE NOTICE.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Essex ss. Probate Court.

To all Persons interested in the Estate of GEORGE UPTON, late of Peabody, in said county, glue manufacturer, deceased, GREETING:

Whereas, King Upton, of Salem, in said county, named as an executor in the last will and testament of said deceased, heretofore proved, has presented to said Court his petition praying that letters testamentary may be issued to him jointly with Marian C. Upton, and Henry Wardwell, the other executors therein named, and that he may be exempt from giving a surety or sureties on his bond, for the reasons alleged in said petition.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Salem, in said county of Essex, on the first Monday of May, next, at nine o'clock, before noon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.

And said King Upton is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper, called the Peabody Press, printed at Peabody, the last publication to be two days at least before said Court.

Witness, George F. Choate, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this sixteenth day of April, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-three. J. T. Mahoney, Register.

ADMINISTRATOR'S NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given, that the subscriber has been duly appointed administrator of the estate of DANIEL C. GOODWIN, late of Peabody in the county of Essex, currier, deceased, and has taken upon himself that trust, by giving bonds, as the law directs. All persons having demands upon the estate of said deceased are required to exhibit the same; and all persons indebted to said estate are called upon to make payment to

Miscellaneous.

CAT GUT.

Violin, guitar, and banjo strings, and in fact all sorts that come under the general head of "gut," are made from the entrails of lambs and cattle, from the delicate threads used for sewing racket ball covers up to the half-inch thick round belts. After a lamb is seven months old its entrails are no longer fit for making strings for violins; consequently this branch of the manufacture can only be carried on a few months in each year.

"Few people," said Mr. Turner, a manufacturer here, "have any idea of the many uses to which gut strings are now put. They are used to hold up clock weights, for belting, for the lacing on lawn tennis and racket bats, for lacrosse scoops, for weaving fine whip covers, for sewing covers on balls, for jewellers' drills, and for a thousand things, I suppose, that even I do not know of. One down-town manufacturer uses from $7,000 to $8,000 per annum just for making lawn tennis, racket, and battledore bats. 'Anglers' leaders, or snells?' No, not at all, although most people have an idea that those are made of gut. That material would never do for such a purpose. It would get soft in the water in a few minutes and the fish would eat it off. In fact I don't know but what it would be good bait. Most so-called 'gut' leaders are made form silk and the best from a marine plant.

"All the work of making gut strings is about the same, but greater care has to be exercised in preparing those intended for musical instruments than others. The process of manufacturing those is comparatively simple, but far from easy. When the entrails, for which a good price has to be paid, are thoroughly cleaned, they are split with a razor. Only one half is fit for use in violin strings. This is the upper or smoth half. The lower half is fatty, rough, and of unequal thickness. The strips are put through rollers turned by hand for eight or nine days, to take all the stretch out of them. Then they are spun, or twisted. Five or six strands go to make an E string, eight or nine an A string, and twenty are put into a D string. Then they go through a bleaching bath of sulphur fumes. After that they are twisted again. Then they are softened in pearlash water, again subjected to the action of the sulphur fumes, twisted again, dried, and finally rubbed down smoth with pumice stone. Altogether it takes ten or eleven days to make a string. When done they are each 72 inches long—four lengths for a violin—and thirty of them coiled separately and tied together make up the 'bundle' of the trade. We can make just as good violin strings here as the best that come from Saxony or any other part of Germany, and very much better than any that are made in France, but we cannot compete with the best Italian string in point of quality. The Italian makers have one great advantage—that the raw material is thin, fine, free from fat, and evenly smooth all around, so that they can use the whole, instead of having to split, as we must. That gives to their completed strings a durability and evenness that we cannot attain. No gut harp strings are made in this country.

"A good many E strings now used on violins in this country are made of steel wire. This is the finest string and most liable to break. The wire is, of course, the most durable by far, but it lacks the tone of a gut string. Perhaps the strongest recommendation in favor of wire strings is that they can be furnished for about fifteen cents a dozen.—N. Y. Sun.

NOT SO SMART, AFTER ALL.

A woman dropped into a commission house on Woodbridge street to purchase a barrel of apples for family use, but she did not mean to be bitten in the purchase.

"Are all the best ones on top?" she cautiously asked.

"Oh, no; the contents are alike all the way through."

"Will you knock the head out of the other end?"

"Certainly, madam," and and in two minutes the feat was accomplished and she saw the same grade of choice apples. This satisfied her that there was no deception, and she paid over her money. It was not until she related the circumstance at the dinner table that anything happened to raise a doubt in her mind. Then her husband said:

"My dear, I used to buy and pack and ship apples. The rule is a peck of nice ones at either end of the barrel and a bushel and a half of worm-holes in the middle. Pass the butter.—Detroit Free Press.

A TEA DRUNKARD.

The term "tea drunkard" is known throughout Russia, and implies, not the abuse of robus or any spirit distilled from the herb, but that the cup which cheers intoxicates also, if zealously adhered to. Strong tea is well-known to be a powerful though fleeting, excitant of the nervous system; and if the reader likes to make the experiment, let him drink a dozen or fifteen cups of tea in the Russian style—that is, without cream or sugar, but flavored with a drop of lemon-juice—in the space of a couple of hours, and he may arrive at the conclusion that there is something rational about such an epithet as tea drunkard after all.—Chambers's Journal.

The wonderful sack of flour which was sold so often during war times, netting two hundred thousand dollars for the sanitary fund, is to be placed on exhibition in a California town. Probably after it has been on exhibition a few years, some boarding house keeper will buy it to work up into indestructible biscuits.—Pecks Sun.

For Dyspepsia, Costiveness, Sick Headache, Chronic Diarrhœa, Jaundice, Impurity of the Blood, Fever and Ague, Malaria, and all Diseases caused by Derangement of Liver, Bowels and Kidneys.

SYMPTOMS OF A DISEASED LIVER.

Bad Breath; Pain in the Side, sometimes the pain is felt under the Shoulder-blade, mistaken for Rheumatism; general loss of appetite; Bowels generally costive, sometimes alternating with lax; the head is troubled with pain, is dull and heavy, with considerable loss of memory, accompanied with a painful sensation of leaving undone something which ought to have been done; a slight, dry cough and flushed face is sometimes an attendant, often mistaken for consumption; the patient complains of weariness and debility; nervous, easily startled; feet cold or burning, sometimes a prickly sensation of the skin exists; spirits are low and despondent, and, although satisfied that exercise would be beneficial, yet one can hardly summon up fortitude to try it—in fact, distrusts every remedy. Several of the above symptoms attend the disease, but cases have occurred when but few of them existed, yet examination after death has shown the Liver to have been extensively deranged.

It should be used by all persons, old and young, whenever any of the above symptoms appear.

Persons Traveling or Living in Unhealthy Localities, by taking a dose occasionally to keep the Liver in healthy action, will avoid all Malaria, Bilious attacks, Dizziness, Nausea, Drowsiness, Depression of Spirits, etc. It will invigorate like a glass of wine, but is no intoxicating beverage.

If You have eaten anything hard of digestion, or feel heavy after meals, or sleepless at night, take a dose and you will be relieved.

Time and Doctors' Bills will be saved by always keeping the Regulator in the House!

For, whatever the ailment may be, a thoroughly safe purgative, alterative and tonic can never be out of place. The remedy is harmless and does not interfere with business or pleasure.

IT IS PURELY VEGETABLE,

And has all the power and efficacy of Calomel or Quinine, without any of the injurious after effects.

A Governor's Testimony.

Simmons Liver Regulator has been in use in my family for some time, and I am satisfied it is a valuable addition to the medical science.

J. Gill Shorter, Governor of Ala.

Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, of Ga., says: Have derived some benefit from the use of Simmons Liver Regulator, and wish to give it a further trial.

"The only Thing that never fails to Relieve."—I have used many remedies for Dyspepsia, Liver Affection and Debility, but never have found anything to benefit me to the extent Simmons Liver Regulator has. I sent from Minnesota to Georgia for it, and would send further for such a medicine, and would advise all who are similarly affected to give it a trial as it seems the only thing that never fails to relieve.

P. M. Janney, Minneapolis, Minn.

Dr. T. W. Mason says: From actual experience in the use of Simmons Liver Regulator in my practice I have been and am satisfied to use and prescribe it as a purgative medicine.

NEW ENGLAND ONE PRICE SHOE HOUSE.

186 ESSEX ST., SALEM.

HEAD OF CENTRAL.

We had the pleasure of visiting the Salem Alms House last Sabbath, in company with Alderman Taber, of New Bedford, upon the invitation of His Honor Mayor Hill, of Salem. We arrived at the farm, which is so pleasantly located on Salem Neck, a short time before religious services, and were shown around the building, visiting the various departments, where were the unfortunates who are dependent upon the charity of our neighboring city.—We went unannounced, so that we saw the every day workings of the institution, in which nothing was concealed from view. The place is a credit to Salem. Good air and ventilation, and perfect cleanliness is apparent from the top to the bottom of the institution.—Mr. Barker, the superintendent, is well fitted for his position, and by his kindness and successful management has won the love of the inmates as well as increased the income of the farm to the city, so that it is not only productive enough to provide for the inmates there, but it realizes a handsome sum to the city by the sale of its products.—A particularly noticeable feature is the care of the insane. We were informed that these unfortunate people are nearly all cared for by Salem, here, instead of being sent to the hospitals for the care of the insane. Mr. Barker came to the institution at first to care for them solely, and by his kindness and tact in their management proved so successful that he was given the sole charge of the Farm. Insane people who, two and three years ago, were violent, and were confined in cells, without clothing, are now under perfect control, are suffered the freedom of the place without restraint, and give very little trouble to the keepers. This change has been due, almost solely, to the kind treatment which they have received. As we entered the room where the females were about to leave for divine service we found them under the direction of Mrs. Hanson, a woman whom, at first sight, it would seem that any of them could overpower, but whose control was easily perceptible. They went to the service as easily and gently as if they had been sane all their lives, and remained through the entire service with no disturbance—and these persons, we were told, were hopelessly insane. Surely the wonderful power of this little woman cannot be too strongly commended. In the hospital department were found several invalids—all in good hands—and everything was in the best order. We noticed also at the religious service the little girl who had been so inhumanly treated, and who had been taken here at the instance of Mayor Hill. Her arms were badly discolored by the bruises which she had received, and her ear showed marks of the piercing from a darning needle, an amusement which the cruel woman evidently had made frequent use of.—Several songs were rendered, in which the inmates joined—using the Gospel Hymns—after which a sermon was delivered by Dea. Carlton, who regularly preaches there. The sermon of Sunday was supplemented by a kindly word of exhortation by His Honor the Mayor, to which Alderman Taber added a few well chosen words. We were impressed with the attention given to the entire service by the inmates, and they appeared particularly glad to see Mayor Hill, who is much interested in the poor people. He was a welcome visitor in every department—he had a cheerful word for each—calling them all by name. It was evident that Mayor Hill was no stranger to the institution or its inmates. Salem has reason to be proud of its Alms House and the kind care which is given by its overseer and his wife, with their faithful assistants.

PENALTY FOR SIN.—May 7, James Doyle, drunk, $5.85.

James E. Reynolds, drunk, four months in House of Correction.

PEABODY.

The School Committee have in contemplation securing a musical instructor for the Center, Wallis and Bowditch schools, for the remainder of the term, an opportunity having been afforded to secure on favorable terms Mr. Bill, the new musical director of the So. Cong. Church.

The Naumkeag Street Railway have put on two handsome new box cars, Nos. 47 and 48, from the works of John Stephenson & Co., New York. No. 48 was seen on our streets Saturday afternoon. They are elegantly finished and a good addition to the rolling stock of the road.

The new Rolling Mills building at the Port is now apparently completed, and is a large and fine looking structure. A 100-horse power tubular boiler has arrived from the Richard Dobbins boiler works at Lowell, and will be set at these Mills by Thomas E. Wilson of Peabody.—Danvers Mirror.

The annual meeting of the Unitarian Society was held last Monday evening. S. A. Southwick was chosen Moderator and George M. Foster, Clerk. The following were elected as Standing Committee: Nathaniel Symonds, Alex. B. Merrill, Chas. H. Dodge. Nathaniel Symonds was chosen treasurer and collector, and Geo. F. Osgood assistant collector.

The musical committee of the South Congregational Church have engaged the services of Caleb R. Bill, of Salem, as director of music for the ensuing year, and a chorus choir will be organized as soon as practicable. A movement in this direction has been in contemplation for some time. Mr. Bill has had considerable experience, having been musical instructor of the schools in Gloucester and other places.

GENERAL ORDER } Boston,
No. 5. } May 4, 1883.

Comrades,—In accordance with our Rules and Regulations and General Order, No. 10, National Headquarters, Wednesday, May 30, will be observed as Memorial Day.

The Posts of this Department are expected to make suitable arrangements for the proper observance of the Day, inviting the public generally to participate with them upon this occasion. Each and every Comrade of this Department is expected to throw aside for this day the cares and labors of life and devote himself to the decoration of the graves of his fallen Comrades.

Let no Comrade's grave be neglected. See to it that the flag, for whose honor they died, waves over each. Lay upon their graves the laurel and the rose, strew them with the buds and blossoms of Spring, and tenderly cherish their memories and the sacrifices they made for a nation redeemed.

From the memories that cluster around their graves bright creations spring up to light the pathway of the living, stimulating them to a nobler thought and a better life. For every loyal form that fell beneath the blood-red stroke of battle a hundred virtues rise in the shape of Fraternity, Charity and Loyalty, to walk the world and bless it, and every tear that sorrow drops upon the graves of our dead Comrades upon Memorial Day sheds a sweet benediction upon the living. Comrades, as you stand beside these honored mounds vivid memories will arise of the ardent, brave, courageous and generous, who lie beneath them. To those Comrades life was dear, the ties of home sacred, the hopes and prospects of the future bright, yet, moved by the purest patriotism, they voluntarily relinquished all for their country's honor.

Confidently hoping for such observance of the day as shall testify how revered are the patriotic dead, how sacred the cause in which they fell, and how under our banner of Fraternity, Charity and Loyalty, we pledge ourselves anew to preserve their memories, and to faithfully guard the charges sealed to us by their precious blood.

I would urge upon my comrades of this Department the necessity of discountenancing upon Memorial Day, every form of amusement, such as boat racing, dancing, etc., which seem to be growing up among us, and which is carried on by unthinking people. Refrain from them, denounce them upon all occasions as a sacrilege upon the day made sacred to the memory of those who died that this nation and country might remain undivided, under a common flag.

Comrades will discontinue the use of the words "Decoration Day," which is a misnomer, and hereafter, upon all occasions, use the words "Memorial Day," as per vote of the National Encampment at Baltimore, Md., June, 1882.

When a newspaper, says one of ou exchanges, gets so low down morally and hard up for a sensation as to commence throwing mud at its neighbors, it is certainly in a dangerous condition Such a course either shows desperation or a lack of good common sense.

SOUTH PEABODY.—D. B. Brown is to remove into the house recently vacated by Frank Needham.

The gypsies who have been encamped at Brown's Pond broke camp last week and left town. No great loss.

The work of removing the wood, stumps, mud, etc., is progressing finely under the management of H. N. Batchelder, at the reservoir at Spring pond. A road is being built from Spring pond to the basin below.

Communion services were held at the church last Sunday; there were two admissions to the church. In the evening a missionary concert was held, when some very interesting reports were read by different members of the church.

Wilbur, son of David Shaw, was severely bitten in the forehead and lip by a dog belonging to Alerson Galeucia, last Monday.

Mr. M. E. Tucker is building a new house on the premises of the late Robert Murray, to be occupied by Theodore Murray and used as a periodical store.

The new Horse Railroad track is laid as far as S. C. Bancroft's. The workmen's car came over as far as the Post Office Tuesday evening.

Mr. Alfred T. Parker and Miss Annie S. Larrabee were united in marriage last Friday evening at the residence of the groom's parents on Brown street, Rev. J. W. Colwell performing the ceremony. About fifty invited guests were present, and a very enjoyable time was had. The couple were the recipients of many valuable and useful presents. The company went away at a late hour, wishing the couple a happy and pleasant life.

The Essex Institute has set apart the evening of Monday, May 14, as a memorial night, when short sketches of the following persons, lately deceased, may be expected: Of John Bertram, by Rev. E. S. Atwood; of Oliver Carlton, by Col. Leverett Saltonstall; of Augustus Story, by Rev. Chas. T. Brooks; of James O. Safford, by Hon. Robert S. Rantoul; and of Samuel Johnson, by Rev. E. B. Willson. Members of the Institute and all others interested in the persons to be commemorated are invited to be present.

F. A. BRAGDON.

Dialogue between Mr. and Mrs. Smith, just before and at Supper.

MRS. S.—(Laying the cloth for supper.)—Why, John! what have you in that paper done up so nicely?

MR. S.—Oh! I will show you directly I get my coat off; I was coming up street and remembering the advertisement we saw in the PEABODY PRESS, I stopped in and bought a loaf of Bragdon's Home Cream Bread.

MRS. S.—Well, John, you know I abomi, hate Baker's bread, I never could bear it—and after all our trials—

MR. S.—I know my dear, but you said if you could get such bread as you liked, it would save you so much trouble this hot weather. You know you have tried every other Baker's bread, and I thought we might as well try them all.

MRS. S.—Well, well, John, it is of no consequence, a loaf of bread does not amount to much, and Bragdon's is undoubtedly like all the rest, but I will put some on the table for supper, as I am all out of my own make.

MR. S.—Very well, Mrs. S.

MRS. S.—Oh! John! just come and look at this, please.

MR. S.—Can't just now, I am reading the account of this Tewksbury muddle.

MRS. S.—Well, I will bring you some thing nicer than you ever saw, just look!

MR. S.—What nice bread; do let me taste it, this is the best bread on earth, no need of your baking bread now, we have at last found the right Baker, for it is impossible to equal such as this. We will have Bragdon's team stop at the house every day, he has cards and all you have to do is to put one in the window.

MRS. S.—Well, John, tea is ready, but to tell the truth I fear this loaf will be only enough for one meal if you keep on.

MR. S.—Yes, I have eaten eight slices thus far.

MRS. S.—But John please try my cake, I tried a new receipt this afternoon.

MR. S.—I prefer this bread, with all due respect to you and your cake, for such bread is so much of a rarity, that you must excuse me if I take the last piece. Don't fail to put your card up tomorrow, and when I see Bragdon I must see if he will not give us the receipt, then you can make it yourself.

MRS. S.—Oh no John! I much prefer to buy of the teams, and I hear they are so accommodating, and then the hot weather, you know.

What is Wealth?

What is wealth? ye worldly knaves,
Mammon's crew of fettered slaves—
Ye who seem to know so well
What is wealth—I bid you tell!
Spendthrift young and miser gray,
All may guess what ye may say;
Millions cry, "'Tis gold alone!"
And millions echo back the tone.

What is wealth? ask all around—
We hear men breathe one common sound;
We see them turn with eager stare,
To gaze upon "the richest heir."
The maiden weds, and we are told,
Weds well, because her lord hath gold:
Ye fools, and is there nothing more
Worth calling wealth, but yellow ore?

Hath Heaven dispensed to mortal share
Nought else to claim our ceaseless care?
Is there no music we can think
So perfect as the ducats' chink?
No Eden left to wander through,
Save the deep caverns of Peru?
Is wealth a blessing none can hold,
Save in the shape of worshipped gold?

Oh! hoodwinked creatures that we are!
To see but one soul-guiding star,
When there are myriad rays of light
More pure, more warm, and full as bright!
Riches, what are ye? Oh! how blind
Is he who cannot, will not find
The choicest "wealth" held from above
In peaceful health and trusting love!

Who shall say what the boon is worth,
To rise from slumber and go forth,
To shout, to leap, to laugh, to run,
'Twixt the green grass and golden sun?
To see the mountain high and wide,
And feel that we can climb its side,
And breathe upon that mountain peak
With bounding limb and mantling cheek.

Pussy Willow.

Oh, you pussy willow! Pretty little thing,
Coming with the sunshine of the early spring!
Tell me, tell me, pussy, for I want to know,
Where it is you come from, how it is you grow?

Now, my little girlie, if you'll look at me
And my little sisters, I am sure you'll see
Tiny, tiny houses, out of which we peep,
When we first are waking from our winter's sleep;
This is where we come from. How it is we grow,
I will try, my girlie, now to let you know;
As the days grow milder, out we put our heads,
And we lightly move us in our little beds,
Find the world so lovely, as we look about,
That we each day move a little farther out;
And when warmer breezes of the springtime blow,
Then we little pussies all to catkins grow.

Maid of Athens, we must part,
I hear your father—I must start;
He's broken of his midnight rest;
Discretion on my part is best;
I'd better git.

Maid of Athens, ere I go,
Kiss me once, for luck, you know;
Your father's foot is on the stair—
None but the brave deserve the fair—
The gas ain't lit.

Maid of Athens, just once more—
Little ships must hug the shore;
Hark! the dog has broken his chain,
Zounds! I am in hard luck again—
Great Scott! I'm bit.

Selected Story.

Her Prisoner.

The chill November sun had been down about half-an-hour; the early darkness of the autumnal evening was beginning to shield the dreary landscape, and Horatia Hart, standing at the little acclivity of the hill, came to a full stop and looked dubiously around her.

'I'm almost sure this is the place,' said Horatia; 'I've passed a deserted mill, six poplar-trees in a row, and a ruined chalk-pit all grown up with weeds and briars. And Helen's letter says three stone-houses with iron-fences around them, and terraced down to the river. One is shut up on account of some ridiculous ghost-story, the second is a Sanitarium, where genteel mad people are genteelly entertained—only fancy having a Sanitarium for a neighbor!—and the third is Helen's house. Or, stop—is it the second that is Helen's house, and the third the Sanitarium? It can't be possible that I've forgotten such a simple thing as that!'

Horatia, a tall girl of five o r six and twenty, with handsome, near-sighted eyes, protected by eye-glasses, and luxuriant brown hair wreathing itself into a multitude of curls and rings over her low, square forehead, bit her lip from sheer vexation

'Wait,' she said; 'it is yet light enough to see. I'll look at Helen's letter again.'

But all in vain was the diligent search in her dress-pocket, her traveling bag, the embroidered strap which held her novel and shawl. The letter was lost.

'What a goose I am,' thought she.

'First, to adopt the ridiculous idea of surprising Nell, instead of telegraphing sensibly to her that I was coming; second, to lose the letter! Well, there's no help for it; I must go valiantly forward and do the best I can—with goblins, mad people and all! for it's growing dark, and I've no idea of becoming a grown-up 'Babe-in-the-Woods!' '

A brisk walk down the hill, a turn or two amid the leaf-carpeted aisle of the woods, and Miss Hart came in view of the shadowy outline of three solid gray-stone houses.

'The middle one is Nell's,' she said. 'I am sure of it. There are red curtains at the windows and the shadows of plants—and Nell delights in warm colors and flowers. Ah, I've found her out at last!'

She opened the gate and walked in triumphantly.

Almost at the same instant that the gate clicked behind her, a tall, dark form rose from behind the shrubbery—a man's figure. Horatia started, and her heart beat quickly, but she resolved to display no fear, and she stood her ground bravely.

'Does Miss Stanbury live here,' she inquired.

'No,' said a sweet, deep voice in low, measured accents, 'but King Solomon does. Excuse me—but I believe this is the Queen of Sheba?'

A thrill of icy horror ran through Horatia's veins. Was she, then, face to face, in the ghastly twilight, with a raving madman?

In an instant, however, she had decided upon her cue. Fears, doubts, hesitations, were entirely out of the question. She answered:

'You are quite right. And you?'

'I am King Solomon—of course,' was the reply. 'Allow me to lead you to the palace.'

He offered her his arm courteously, but Horatia recoiled. Glancing quickly about the surrounding shrubberies, she perceived a pretty little Greek summer-house embowered in vines.

'I should like to rest,' she said, 'in there before we go to the palace.'

'As you please,' the voice answered calmly, and the owner thereof led her with exaggerated courtesy to the pretty retreat.

'May I sit in your Majesty's presence?' he asked, smiling. 'Because I have been standing out there half an hour at least, expecting your arrival.'

But as he seated himself, Horatia, whose quick eye perceived that there was a lock and key on the door, and that the closely-placed cedar-logs of the summer-house, thickly interwoven with wisteria and woodbine, admitted of no escape, jumped up, rushed swiftly past him, and in a second secured the door and was rushing frantically away with the key in her hand, her footsteps accelerated by the fact that 'King Solomon' behind her was rattling at the door and shaking the solid cedar frame-work behind her, while he called loudly for aid.

As she hurried breathlessly up the graveled drive of the next house, her heart beating as though it would burst through her bosom, the door opened, a warm flood of firelight and candle-shine streamed across the laurels, and Cousin Helen herself came out and looked up and down the path.

'I wonder what can have become of the baker's man,' she said aloud to some one within. 'John, suppose you go and see.'

'Oh, he's all right,' contentedly remarked the baritone voice of Cousin Helen's husband inside. 'You always are in such a hurry about everything, Nell!'

'There's some one coming up by the lilac-bushes now,' said Helen. 'It's him. No, it isn't him! It's a woman! It's Horatia Hart!'

And with outstretched arms of welcome she hurried to greet her cousin.

'Dear Horatia,' she cried, 'I am very glad to see you! But what is the matter? You look so pale! and you are trembling all over! 'Surely,' she added, half in jest, half in earnest, 'you haven't seen the ghost that walks the terrace in front of the Tillbury House?'

'No,' said Horatia, letting herself sink into one of the deep-cushioned ruby-velvet chairs in the old hall, which Cousin John had set out for her; 'but I've seen a madman.'

'Good gracious,' said Helen.

'Wasn't very violent, was he,' Cousin John inquired.

'No,' gasped Horatia; 'I can not deny but that he was civil enough; but he was mad—raving mad! Oh, Nell! oh, John! I was so frightened!'

'Where is the fellow,' cried Cousin John, grasping at a knotted blackthornstick which hung on gilded hooks against the mantel.

'John, John,' shrieked his wife, seizing hold of his coat-tail; 'you surely are not going to run into danger? Oh, John, think of me and the children!'

'I am going to the Sanitarium to beat up the doctor and one of the keepers,' said Cousin John, disengaging himself from Helen's grasp. 'Which direction did the madman go, Horatia?'

'I've locked him up,' cried the triumphant Horatia, waving the key in the air, 'in the summer-house! He's safe for the present, at least.'

'Wise little girl,' said Cousin John, sapiently nodding his head. 'Stay you here with Nelly, and—'

'But we don't want to stay, John,' said Nelly, breathless with interest. 'We want to see the captive. Don't we, Horatia?'

'Of course we do,' said Horatia, who felt herself the heroine of the occasion.

And so, in a battalion of three, this strong force moved upon the Willow Dell Sanitarium.

Horatia had expected to see a row of cells iron-grated and iron-guarded by ponderous locks; but to her surprise they were ushered into a cosy reception-room, where gilt bird-cages painted satin screens and cheerful pictures were arrayed in graceful attractiveness. The superintendent heard their story with interest.

'It is very unfortunate that the lady should have been startled,' said he. 'I really was not aware that any of our guests were at large since Miss Dupree, poor thing, got away. And we are quite sure that she will return soon. It's embarrassing to the neighbors, very, and I must see that it doesn't happen again. Saunders' (to a respectable-looking footman), 'tell Warren to look over the list and see what gentleman is missing from quarters.'

'He calls himself King Solomon,' said Horatia, timidly.

'Ah, poor things, they have all sorts of delusions,' said the superintendent. 'And, Saunders, ask Dr. Wainwright to be so good as to step here.'

'Please, sir,' said Saunders, 'he ain't in. He walked down the path to try and coax Miss Dupree back, as he'd heard she was wandering around, and—'

'Very well,' said the superintendent.

'Then we had better go down after this unfortunate creature without him. Only his influence is very good on the patients. That's right, Saunders, the lantern. Now, Mr. Barlow,' to Cousin John, 'we will start, if you please.'

And in five minutes they were all gathered around the summer-house, where 'King Solomon' was safely ensconced like a full-grown mouse in a trap.

'I'll unlock the door and go in, if you will hold the lantern,' said the superintendent. 'They're used to me, and—'

'I assure you, Dr. Verinder, that you will not find me at all violent,' said a quiet voice as the superintendent stepped cautiously over the threshold.

'Why,' ejaculated that gentleman, 'it's the doctor!'

'It's Dr. Wainwright himself,' exclaimed Saunders from the background.

'You don't tell me,' said the superintendent, 'that this young lady took you for a madman?'

'I believe it was a mutual misunderstanding,' said Dr. Wainwright, whose brilliant hazel eyes sparkled brimful of fun in the shifting light of the lantern. 'In the darkness I mistook her or our poor runaway 'Queen of Sheba,' Miss Dupree, and she, not unnaturally, regarded a man who called himself 'King Solomon' as a hopeless imbecile.'

'I—I am sure I beg ten thousand pardons,' cried Horatia, turning scarlet amid the laughter of the assembled group.

'Pray, don't mention it,' said the doctor. But after Horatia was safe beside the Barlow fireside, Cousin Nell wrung her hands in despair.

'There's an end for good and all,' she said, 'of the match I was going to make up between our Horatia and young Dr. Wainwright; for no man can be expected to fall in love with a girl who locks him up for a madman! And he was such a rising young man in his profession, too. He would have suited you exactly, Horatia.'

'I never want to see him again, or hear his name,' said Horatia, bursting into tears of mortification.

She went back to the city the next day, declaring that nothing should induce her to live next door to a 'Sanitarium.' But subsequently she was induced to change her mind by the persistent and accomplished doctor, who had fallen desperately in love with his fair captor, and in due time he became 'her prisoner for life.'

It requires pluck now and then to run a newspaper in the far West, as the following paragraph, taken from the Socorro (N. M.) Sun amply shows: "This issue of the Sun appears under quite unromantic circumstances. We aimed to get out more matter than usual, but yesterday's wind knocked the time out of us thusly: The adobe roof under which we labored, partially fell in and caused the intelligent compositors and brain-workers to cease all further labor for the week. We will be located in our new office in a few days, unless the rest of the roof catches us before we move. We lose about $50 worth of material, but we are rich. Besides, we have had the pleasure of setting up three galleys of type on the floor. We desire to publicly thank the foreman of the office, who, when the timbers cracked, extended his cheek and held the wavering mass till the force escaped."

The counterfeiters have discovered a new dodge, and it is really a wonder they haven't thought of it before. The plan is to make silver dollars precisely like those issued by the government mints in every respect. They are really not counterfeits, but simply copies of the genuine silver dollar, being of the same weight, the same fineness and the same value, the only difference being that they are made by private parties instead of the government. The counterfeiters make it almost impossible to detect their work, while, owing to the fact that their dollar, like the "regular" one contains only 86 to 88 cents worth of metal, they are able to make the same profit of 12 to 14 cents that Uncle Sam makes on the legal dollar. This counterfeit, it is said, is being circulated in large numbers, and as it is just as good as the genuine, the government is the only loser.

THE RAILROAD CONSOLIDATION.—Willard P. Phillips, one of the three trustees for the bondholders, has filed a bill in the Supreme Court in equity, asking that the execution of the lease be restrained, on the ground that by its terms the rights of the certificate holders were not properly protected, and that the lease was not as a whole, legal. Mr. Phillips informed the Traveler that he filed the bill in equity because he felt it his duty, as a trustee, to do so. He does not believe that the lease, as now framed, is legal, nor does he think that the holders of the debt certificates are properly protected by its provisions. He contends that the Boston & Maine people have, in every particular, secured the best of the bargain, and is also of the opinion that the Eastern Company is practically giving its road and franchises away.

Now is the time when every farmer is seen returning home, with a bundle of laths in the rear of his wagon, to use in keeping those pesky hens from scratching everything up.

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

When a New York policeman tried to wake up a boy who was leaning over a railing on Broadway, he found that the boy was dead. A number of people had noticed him at different times during the day, but supposed he was a district telegraph messenger going after the doctor.

TO OWNERS OR KEEPERS OF DOGS.

Extracts from Chapter 102 of Public Statutes:

SECT. 80. Every owner or keeper of a dog of three months old or over shall annually, on or before the thirtieth day of April, cause it to be registered, numbered, described, and licensed for one year from the first day of the ensuing May, in the office of the clerk of the city or town wherein said dog is kept, and shall cause it to wear around its neck a collar distinctly marked with its owner's name and its registered number.

SECT. 81. An owner of a dog may at any time have it licensed until the first day of the ensuing May; and a person becoming the owner or keeper of a dog after the first day of May, not duly licensed, shall cause it to be numbered, described and licensed as provided in the preceding section.

SECT. 82. The fee for every license shall be two dollars for a male dog, and five dollars for a female dog.

SECT. 87. Whoever keeps a dog contrary to the provisions of this chapter shall forfeit fifteen dollars; five dollars of which shall be paid to the complainant, and ten dollars to the treasurer of the county in which the dog is kept.

SECT. 90. The mayor of each city and the chairman of the selectmen of each town shall annually, within ten days from the first day of July, issue a warrant to one or more police officers or constables, directing them to proceed forthwith to kill or cause to be killed all dogs within such city or town not licensed and collared according to the provisions of this chapter, and to enter complaint against the owners or keepers thereof; and any person may, and every police officer and constable shall, kill or cause to be killed all such dogs whenever or wherever found.

Miscellaneous.

There is a prospect that the currency of the country will not be as clean after the first of next July as it has been for the last year. For many years it has been the practice of Congress to appropriate a sufficient sum to pay the express charges upon the transportation of soiled and mutilated currency for redemption. The theory of this expenditure has been that it was better for the convenience and health of the people that the currency should be kept clean, and that it would be less likely to be in good condition if banks were compelled to pay their own express charges.—When the Democrats obtained control of Congress they refused to make an appropriation for this purpose, and the currency immediately began to show the effects of it. The complaints were so great that in the succeeding Congress the appropriation was again made. This year, by some inadvertance between the two houses, the amount, $50,000, was dropped out, and after July 1 all persons desiring to have currency redeemed and to obtain new notes will be compelled to pay their own transportation charges. The Treasury expects that the result will be the same as it hitherto has been—a dirty currency.

Edward A. Cole, son of Samuel K. Cole, died at his father's house at Bridgewater on Sunday morning, aged 31 years. Mr. Cole was formerly with B. F. Crocker in the drug business and for seven years has been a resident of Salem, where he had many warm friends who will learn of his death with the deepest sorrow. He was a young man of exempiary character and his death is greatly lamented by all who enjoyed his acquaintance. His funeral was held on Wednesday and a delegation of the Salem Cadets, of which he was an esteemed member, attended in testimony of their respect for his memory.—Brockton Gazette.

The new and elegant steamers Massachusetts and Rhode Island, which were so popular on the Providence route to New York last year, will this season run in connection with the Stonington Line. Trains leave the Boston and Providence Railroad daily, (Sundays excepted) at 6.30 P. M., connecting with one or the other of these steamers at Stonington at 9.20 P. M., arriving in New York at 6 A. M.—Tickets and staterooms can be secured of J. W. Richardson, Agent, 214 Washington street, or at Boston and Providence Railroad station.

At a stockholders meeting of the Lynn & Boston railroad company held at their office in Boston, on Wednesday afternoon, it was decided to issue $100,000 in five per cent. bonds, to pay for the building of the Peabody extension and meet the expense of other improvements made necessary by the increasing business of the road. Out of the three thousand shares sixteen hundred were represented, and every one voted in favor of the issuing of the bonds.

Brother Miner and his disciples in the prohibitory cause are opposed to high rates for license because the cash so gained for the treasury is "blood money," and because a license is a "compact with sin." So they will have the Maine style—lots of liquor sold and no money in the treasury for it, but all the burden to be borne by sober citizens. That is sensible, isn't it?—Cambridge Press.

The cafe at the Point of Pines has been leased for the coming summer to J. H. Wyman, the well-known restaurateur of Washington street, Boston. Mr. Wyman will run the above with a department similar to his Boston cafe, and will also have Rhode Island clambakes, fish dinners, a table d'hote, &c. He will also be prepared to furnish picnics and excursions with everything they desire.

The Shoe and Leather Reporter says: The dressed beef project bids fair to revolutionize the cattle business in this country. If signs count for anything, the time is rapidly approaching when the beeves will all be slaughtered at convenient points in the West and shipped East in refrigerator cars.

Eleven children have been born into one family in this town; the birthday of each being upon a different month. Not long since, the only month which had not been thus honored, was made the occasion for the advent of the first grand-child.—Ipswich Chronicle.

THE ANTIQUITY OF THE SPOON.

The use of our common table utensil, the spoon, is widespread, and its invention, as it appears, dates from remote antiquity. The form which we use at the present day—a small oval bowl, provided with a shank and flattened handle—is not that which has been universally adopted. If we examine into the manners and customs of some of the people less civilized than we—the Kabyles, for example—we shall find that they use a round wooden spoon. The Romans also used a round spoon, which was made of copper. We might be led, from the latter fact, to infer that the primitive form of this utensil was round, and that the oval shape was comparatively a modern invention. But such is not the case; for M. Chantre, on making some excavations on the borders of Lake Paladru, the waters of which had been partially drawn off, found, in a good state of preservation, wooden spoons, which in shape were nearly like those in use at the present day, the only difference being in the form of the handle, which was no wider than the shank. The lacustrine station where these were found dates back to the ninth century, and we therefore have evidence that oval spoons were already in use during the Carlovingian epoch.

The Neolithic people used oval spoons made of baked clay; several fragments of such have been found in the Seine, and M. Perrault has also discovered a number in a Neolithic deposit in Burgundy. This gentleman found, in addition, a pot ladle. "The tablespoons," he says, "are elongated, and exactly resemble the wooden spoons in use in our kitchens. The bowls vary from three to fourteen mm. in depth." The portions of handles which he collected were too fragmentary to allow it to be determined whether or not they terminated in a flattened handle like the modern forms.
